- The Station welcomed the Reference for its guidance on the AMBARB program and its exposition of headquarters' experience and planning relative thereto.
- The Station considers that at present there are insufficient advantages to be gained through direct handling and funding of AMBARB-34 and AMBARB-43.
  - To begin with, the Station has noted generally effective reciprocal collaboration between the two AMBARB representatives and certain Station student assets, other independent democratic student leaders, and ANTEASE-1. In this collaboration the station's student assets have taken advantage of the AMBARBs' presence and assistance; and the Station, through ANTEASE-1, has been able to steer and aid the AMBARBs on an unwitting basis. To illustrate, in June the AMBARBs received from their people an assortment of photographs depicting persecutions, executions, forced labor, and so forth in their homeland. Those photographs that lent themselves student themes they gave to [redacted] and his group who, using appropriate captions prepared and obtained locally through the AMBARBs, made a display of them in a bulletin board-type showcase they control at the University, an operation which [redacted] reported had much impact among the student body and put the Communist leaders on the spot. Turning to ANTEASE-1 for assistance in exploiting the photographs, the latter arranged for construction of an exhibit and for its placement in the offices of the Confederacion de Trabajadores de la Republica de Panama, the local ORIT affiliate. Then later on, in mid-July, ANTEASE-1 and AMBARB-34 took the exhibit to Chiriqui Province where it received further exploitation, in furtherance of ANTEASE-1's propaganda activities. The Station, accordingly, was able to monitor both operations and, in the case of transporting the exhibit to the interior, it also provided funds.
  - Both AMBARBs are in with the University student leaders with whom the Station has been working directly as well as indirectly--e.g. [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], and various others with actual or developing roles in local student affairs. Already able of using various different funding channels and now in liaison contact with [redacted], whose organization is expanding its

activities in the student-youth field, the Station feels that direct dealings with the AMBARBs at this time could complicate its efforts to corral unifying financial control in the democratic student camp. For, to draw an analogy, the stage of democratic student politics at the University, our primary theater of operations, is small, the actual and would-be actors many, and the primary requisite for producing and directing a successful performance is for the Station to keep the cast in order through control of the business departments. It is believed that effective direct handling of the AMBARBs could not be sustained unless we funded them, too; but this in turn not only would inevitably affect the financial control we have been able to gain over the other student activists but also probably cause splits in the democratic camp, which our present restrictive operational funding policies have sought to deter. 3. The Station appreciates what could be gained operationally in other circumstances through direct handling and funding of either or both of the AMBARBs. As the capabilities and interest of our assets and other democratic leaders dissipate, and as new figures arise, the fixed-focus of the AMBARBs should auger for direct handling so as to create new, successor agents and mechanisms; in this sense operations in and the outcome of the University elections next fall could hasten direct contact. Meanwhile, however, in summation of its viewpoints, the Station believes that the two AMBARBs here are contributing well and the democratic student movement is benefitting from their activities without direct Station involvement; that direct handling and funding of the AMBARBs at the present time could affect the Station's handling and funding of its indigenous assets; that if and when necessary the Station can direct and fund the AMBARBs on an unwitting basis through AITEASE-1 (or through other appropriate independent assets if so required); and that, in the meantime, the station will continue to monitor the AMBARBs' activities with a view to the time when direct contact and funding will provide distinct advantages. 4. The present two-slot AMBARB T/O for Panama is believed adequate in view of their and our current activities in the democratic student faction at the University and the gradually improving outlook for the democratic forces' resurgence in the fall elections. Ideally, the replacement of AMBARB-43 with a more active, more interested, better prepared and trained leader, on a par with the kind of activist AMBARB-54 appears to be, could enhance AMBARB's local program; although AITEASE-1 and our student assets accept and think well of both AMBARBs, it is quite evident that AMBARB-54 is considerably ahead of AMBARB-43 in the qualities indicated. The planned maximum of four slots is believed feasible, but on the basis that the two additional representatives dispatched be charged with primary missions in the field of secondary-

school student activities, an area in which good indigenous assets are harder to spot, gain access to independently, recruit, and direct. Such designation of primary activity would hopefully enhance the Station's operational emphasis on spotting and developing worthy secondary-school leaders able of becoming University leaders. In this respect direct handling of the AMBARs concerned would have distinct advantages. For example, the assets they develop that enter the University could be either picked up by the Station, steered unwittingly into Station-backed mechanisms, or transferred to the other AMBARs actually concentrating their efforts at the University level. The Station also could better develop and direct operations in the secondary-school student movement because of the AMBARs' undivided attention, and more effectively cut into the Communists' perennial organizational efforts and agitation in the public secondary schools in the capital area and the interior provinces. On the other hand, if exclusively secondary-school student activities are not within the scope of an AMBAR representative's assignment, then it is felt that the addition of two more AMBARs at the university level, or even if on an across-the-board basis, should bear the condition that the new designees will not openly identify themselves as AMBAR representatives. We believe that open identification would necessitate their alignment with the same groups that the Station, AMBAR-34, and AMBAR-43 already are working, inasmuch as for them to operate openly and independently would cause schisms and possibly further divide the democratic forces, whereupon the concentration of four AMBARs in the same general area of activity would be counter-productive and, from there, wasteful of manpower and talent. As ostensible independent, or covert operators, the two additional AMBARs could conceivably work quietly to unite the democratic forces or at best help coordinate their anti-Communist efforts.
5. With respect to Panama as a possible relocation site for the AMBAR organization's headquarters, the Station offers the following considerations.
a. First, there is the exclusively internal KUBARK viewpoint. As headquarters officers who have visited this Station are aware, this Station has, because of its plant and ODIBLX cover, perhaps superior facilities and services for both local and area-wide administrative and operational support purposes, and already is the operating base for various kinds of Support and KODOVE officers who cover the area. Non-KUBARK ODYORE facilities and services also offer advantages; for example, the ODACID Latin American Regional Courier Center here provides the Station with direct dispatch and receipt of lateral pouches on an area-wide basis. To the Field Case Officer whom headquarters presumably would assign here, without preoccupation as to using an ODACID slot, would accrue also the factors of favorable living conditions (especially if a family man) and good operating climate.

- b. As for the outlook for the AMBARD organization, it is not foreseen that the host government would turn down its relocation here were the preliminary arrangements and actual move conducted discreetly; nor that the general public, once clued to the shift, would resist or consistently oppose it provided there would be no sudden influx of people not actually employed by the organization who would be regarded as creating undue competition in the domestic employment market. Additional considerations are Panama's aspect as a north-south international air junction and world shipping crossroads; the availability of up-to-date office facilities and commercial services at uninflated costs (at least by comparison to what overhead costs would be in Buenos Aires and Caracas); and the favorable environment for AMBARD functionaries. However, removal of the ODYOKE-PBPRIME stigma would be slight due to the traditional latino attitude that ODYOKE runs the whole show here because of its long-term real estate and strategic interests; hence, it would be only to a lesser degree that the AMBARD organization's foes and detractors could use the same propaganda attacks currently directed at the organization in its present location.
6. The observations given in the preceding paragraph should not be construed by Headquarters as a bid for relocation of the AMBARD organization in Panama. Rather, they represent and are given as an informal-consensus of Station opinion and do not take into account, among other things, relocation prospects in other countries and the specific, peculiar requirements of both KUBARK and the AMBARD organization.
