SUBJ: Contact meetings on 3 and 4 May

Operational

1. On 3 and 4 May KAWAK was again contacted and debriefed by Arthur J. Jamey in Copenhagen. Both meetings took place in the "Grand Hotel", where Jamey registered again under ~~AN ALIAS NAME~~.

2. The additional debriefing showed that KAWAK cannot hope, for the time being, to obtain a third visitor's visa for travel to his relatives in Minsk. KAWAK visited the Soviet Embassy on 17 April and was clearly told by a Soviet consular official that his chances for such a visa were practically non-existent. He inquired also about study opportunities in the USSR but did not receive any encouragement in this respect, either. He has had no further contacts with the KGB representatives in Copenhagen and has had no indication, even after his visit at the Soviet Embassy, that the Soviets wish to revive contact with him.

3. KAWAK will complete his last term at Copenhagen University in the first week of June. Finances permitting, he would like to spend the summer in Yugoslavia to improve his theoretical knowledge of Serbo-Croatian. He has made a tentative reservation on an American-Norwegian liner for his return to the U.S. on 9 September. Somewhere between now and this date his plans to marry his girl-friend, Lis PETERSEN, age 23, res. Copenhagen, Østerportvej 169/I, but in view of their financial situation she will probably not accompany him either on his projected trip to Yugoslavia or his home travel but will join him later. She will continue her work at an architect's office in Copenhagen and will help KAWAK financially if his trip to Yugoslavia should materialize.

4. In view of the above developments and KAWAK's personal plan, there is very little likelihood that any productive situation might develop in the short time remaining. Since KAWAK'S CPS potential has evaporated and since the KGB has made no move to renew their contact with him, even after his visit to the Soviet Embassy on 17 April, both [redacted] and Jamey feel that the case does not warrant any further action on our part. Contact with the A.I. could still be maintained, however, for information on KAWAK's relationship with them over the last three years.

5. Under these circumstances the previously requested ~~RESCUE~~ exfiltration does not appear necessary any longer, unless Headquarters thinks that KANTER's general truthfulness should be established. No specific assignments have been given or are contemplated for KANTER at this stage and no further arrangements have been made to see KANTER again before he leaves Copenhagen. He was merely instructed to contact us again, using the previously arranged communication line /letter to (ALIAS NAME) , c/o American Embassy, Copenhagen/, if a/ he should be contacted again by the Soviets in Copenhagen or anywhere in Europe during this summer, b/ if he should come across interesting contacts between the Soviets and the foreign or Danish students in Copenhagen. If the RIS should seek to establish contact with him after his return to ~~THE U.S.~~ his standing instruction is to get in touch with the FBI immediately.

6. KANTER himself appeared very willing to redeem his "previous mistakes" by any action we see fit. A thorough review of his contacts with the RIS did not bring out any contradictions with his confession at the first meetings and showed no indication of continued RIS control over him. Nevertheless his bona fides have not been clearly determined. This should be kept on record for the event that at a later stage KANTER might become again of ~~CRITICAL~~ interest or if he should ever apply for a position with ~~THE U.S.~~ Government.

Additional information on KANTER's visit at Sov. Embassy

7. I visited the Soviet embassy first on 14 April, but was told that it was a holiday and that he should return on 17 April. On 17 April he was received by a Soviet official whom he had seen in the embassy once before but whose name is not known to him. This official is a heavy-set man, age 35-40, approx. height 5'10", athletic build, dark blonde or light-brown hair, round, meaty face, full set of teeth, loud voice. He speaks German but does not know Danish. KANTER talked with him in Russian. When KANTER inquired about his visa, the official asked him when he actually would like to visit his uncle. When KANTER told him that he thought about June or July, the official answered that such a visa matter could not be decided in such a short time and that in general it did not seem worth while for KANTER to try. Then KANTER told him that he could also be in contact in Copenhagen. In Copenhagen, the official did not want. The time there would be hardly possible under the existing conditions. KANTER's remark that he had just been released a scholar ship at a U.S.

university did not seem to interest the Soviet. He listened to KAMRZ's politeness but did not encourage him in any way and gave no indication of a desire to continue the conversation. Only when KAMRZ was about to leave, the Soviet made the casual remark "incidentally, comrade KAMRZOV did not speak well of you" / ne khorosho o vse otzyvalsya/. Then KAMRZ asked "from where, from Moscow?", the Soviet did not react in any way and dismissed KAMRZ without any explanation of his cryptical remark. In KAMRZ's opinion, the Soviet was obviously familiar with KAMRZ's dossier and perhaps wanted to let him know the actual reason for turning down his visa application.

Agenda on KAMRZ's contacts with Soviets in the USSR

B. KAMRZ stated that at the meetings on 11 and 12 April he had forgotten to mention an episode that had occurred at his first trip to the USSR in 1988. Before he left, KILYACHEKOV gave him two English-language books, one about American anecdotes and the other unremembered by KAMRZ as well as two bottles of whiskey. He asked KAMRZ to transmit the books and 1 bottle of whiskey to one /fns/ SHARIFF, a member of the staff of "Moscow News", whom KAMRZ was to call up if he came to Moscow. KILYACHEKOV gave KAMRZ the telephone number 8 800-10 to get in touch with SHARIFF. The second bottle of whiskey was to be given to KAMRZ's uncle - s a present. On his return from Minsk to Copenhagen KAMRZ spent three days in Moscow and stayed at the "Metropol". He remembered KILYACHEKOV's request, called up SHARIFF and was visited by the latter at the hotel. KAMRZ transmitted the books and 1 bottle of whiskey to SHARIFF. The latter asked him if KAMRZ was interested in writing a short article for the "Moscow News" about his impressions in Minsk. KAMRZ agreed and wrote about two handwritten pages, stating that he had been rather favorably impressed by what appeared to be a very fast growth and reconstruction of the city of Minsk. SHARIFF accepted the article, gave KAMRZ 500 rubles as a fee and promised to send KAMRZ a copy of the issue if the article were to be published. KAMRZ signed a receipt for the money. He did not receive any copy and does not know whether the article was ever used. SHARIFF appeared to be at that time about 30-35 years old. He was a short, dark man with a moustache, thin of build. KAMRZ believes that he was either a Georgian or Armenian. He spoke English fluently and indicated that he knew also several Caucasian languages /Georgian, Armenian, etc./. This was all he could say at the time of the interview received from KAMRZ. The Soviets had until this very day no longer lived any Soviets and until this very day he does not feel that there was anything wrong with this comment.

Miscellaneous on family background

9. KAWER's father has his business at Cap. Clairmont Street, Bronx, N.Y. If KAWER will not be able to enter Fordham University immediately after his return home and will have to work, it is possible that he will be helping his father in the latter's business.

10. KAWER has received a letter from his mother who informs him that she is making steps to bring out her brother KANAR's uncle in Linsk officially to the U.S., but KANAR is not sure whether she is thinking of a temporary visitor's visa or a permanent immigration visa. At any rate, she has made out affidavits of support for her brother.

11. KAWER reaffirmed that he was never a member of any organization, except as a boy, when he joined the Sea Scouts. In the district in which he grew up, most of the people were of "progressive views", but his parents took great care to keep him out of this environment, send him to a Hebrew school, and in general took great pains to educate him in traditional values. Both his parents and he himself were considered and consider themselves anti-Communists. KAWER's decision to study Russian was entirely his own and was primarily dictated by his desire to learn more about the country of origin of his parents and to enter a field which had nothing to do with business. He has never felt attracted to business or money-making occupations, an attitude which has caused some conflicts in the past between him and his father.

Review of motivation

12. KAWER reiterated that in 1957 and 1958 he did not consider his contacts with KIYACHEKOV as illicit or conflicting with his loyalty towards the U.S. Though KIYACHEKOV told him to be discreet about their contacts, he allegedly told his friends in Conenhausen that he was meeting him. He was vaguely aware of the direction in which he was being pushed, but since he had a strong desire to go to the USSR and did not provide to KIYACHEKOV any "subversive information", he did not feel that he had overstepped the boundaries of the permissible. Furthermore, KARYACHEKOV presented all his requests for written statements and information about KAWER's family, background, and friends as prerequisites for the issuance of a visitor's visa, and KAWER believed that this was quite consistent with what he had heard about the suspiciousness of the Soviets towards U.S. visitors applying for such a type of visitor.

13. In letting both KIYACHEKOV and later SALCHOV believe that "he has not opposed to be friends with the Soviets", KAWER thought to be very clever and skillful.

... a member of the KGB, he did not want to be identified as such, but he was willing to do so and for £12.50 would tell the KGB about his relatives who were living in the UK, not actually threatening that he was foolishly doing so, but he considered it a very minor expense and convenience to himself. His main desire was to keep the door open for further visits to the USSR. After the recruitment pitch and after his semi-extradition from the USSR, he maintained the contact with KGB, MI6 and later Georgiy BOKHAROV only reluctantly and only because he did not want to cause any trouble to his relatives in the USSR, though, as KANTER admits, none of his KGB contacts ever made any clear or implied threats that his relatives would suffer if he did not collaborate. In fact, the only Soviet who attempted a minor pressure was Georgiy BOKHAROV. He told KANTER once that if he did not collaborate, no visa for him would be forthcoming.

14. Kwok admitted candidly that his desire to study the Russian language was so strong; in 1956 and 1959 that if at that time the Soviets had offered him an opportunity to attend a Soviet university, he would have accepted, even if he had been discouraged by the U.S. authorities. However, after his experience in 1959 he allegedly changed his view radically and just wanted to be left alone. With all that, KWFZ could not provide a logical and plausible explanation why he did not come to the U.S. authorities and report everything. When questioned by Segey rather sharply on this point, he became emotional and stated that "if he really wanted to conceal anything and if we thought that he was still doing what the Soviets told him to do, he certainly would have grabbed the opportunity of destroying his passport and simply deny that he had been in the USSR in 1959".

15. In retrospect, KHMURIE believes that he while he had been very naive in the beginning of his contacts with the Soviets and the NIS, he did not really engage in any "subversive activity", did not supply any valuable information to them, and did not commit anything conflicting with his loyalty as a U.S. citizen. He expressed the regret that he was now unable to prove his worth.

16. As stated above, Kherz's behavior and reactions during those last meetings appeared to be quite consistent with his character and did not indicate any existing KIS control. He volunteered himself the somewhat damaging additional item on his contact with SHARIFF and the payment for an article which was obviously a protest to force some money upon him and have him sign a recd't in his true name.

RELATIVES AND FRIENDS IN THE USSR

b/ 17. a/ Ilya BRODSKY, age 35, Kantor's cousin, oldest son of his uncle, photographer, married to a Russian woman, .. children, lives somewhere in Lithuania in the vicinity of Vilnius. Seen only once by KANTOR. He is a very lively individual, not overly educated, but shrewd and apparently capable in his business. ..political in his views.

b/ Roman BRODSKY, age 30, married to a Jewish woman, also two children. He works in a photographer's studio and earns there about 1400 rubles, but works also on the sly and is probably engaged also in minor black-market affairs. His wife is a teacher in a secondary school and earns about 1000 rubles per month. They reside in a new housing project in Minsk, precise address unknown. Roman BRODSKY completed only the "semiletka"; he was in military service a longer time and reached the rank of sergeant. Completely apolitical in his views. He is an excellent chess player.

c/ Yevgeniy REZNIKOV, age 32-40, husband of KANTOR's aunt's daughter from her previous marriage, judge in a criminal court, allegedly the only Jewish judge in the entire Byelorussian SSR, but his salary is modest, only 1500 rubles in 1959. He is probably a Communist and a party member, but in 1956 or 1959 he was criticized in some Byelorussian newspapers for having passed too lenient sentences in some criminal cases. Yevgeniy REZNIKOV was extremely careful in his few contacts with KANTOR during the latter's visits in Minsk and never engaged in any political conversations.

d/ Grigoriy REZNIKOV, brother of the above, age 26-28, in 1959 was in his last year of physics studies at the University of Minsk. KANTOR had only a few casual contacts with him, but he introduced KANTOR to some other young Soys in Minsk.

e/ One of the above or any other relative expects to travel abroad. KANTOR does not maintain any correspondence with them.

Casual acquaintances and contacts in the USSR in 1958/59

-- 18P. a/ Vladimir, "Volodya," SUBZYDIL, age 25, engineering student at the university in Minsk, who worked also at an unknown factory in Minsk at night shifts. His father has the rare distinction of being one of the few Jewish chairmen of kol'khoz in the Byelorussian SSR. Volodva is not a Communist and did not show any interest in political conversations, but KANTOR found him to be quite interested in Africa, China, and India. He showed a considerable curiosity for the living standards in the U.S. and Western Europe. In 1959 he lived at a dormitory of the Minsk university.

b/ Igor L. U., age 18, the son of a friend of Kharkov, a former member of a Soviet Army regiment, he had no gravitas or a brilliant career at this time. Kharkov once visited his apartment but mostly met ... in Volodya's so-called "prospects", where the leftist youth used to congregate. His main interests were girls at a good time. While he was not a "stil'yaga", he was rarely close to it and obviously used his father's position to gain some material advantages.

c/ Several other young people, belonging to the same group, whose names Kharkov does not recollect and whose main interests were jazz music, dancing, girls.

d/ Irina Aleksandrovna L., age 28, English language translator at the Automobile plant in Minsk, a pretty auburn of medium height, whom Kharkov met through the other young people in summer 1959. They had a short-lived love affair which ended even before Kharkov was expelled from the USSR, since he discovered that she slept with several boys. Irina's father must have had a good position, since the family owned a personal car. Irina never gave Kharkov her last name but did not show much curiosity for his personal background either and did not try to elicit any information from him, though she displayed the usual curiosity for the life in the USA and Western-Europe. In her work she translated English technical journals. She spoke English fairly well but preferred Russian. She told Kharkov that she had been in Czechoslovakia and once mentioned that perhaps she would be sometimes able to come to Denmark as a tourist. Kharkov met her rather frequently in June and July 1959, at least once a week, but was invited to her house only once, when her parents were away.

e/ As with his relatives, Kharkov hardly ever talked politics with the above and did not make any arrangements to keep in touch by mail after his departure from the USSR.

General information on Minsk in 1959

19. As compared with 1958, the building activities in 1959 were very intensive, primarily big blocks of housing projects. The hotel "Minsk" was completed in 1959. Several housing areas and some new buildings were added to the university.

20. In 1959 some city districts still had no "kommunalka" (apartments). From very old still poor districts in which houses did not have decent, let alone necessary facilities, toilets, running water.

21. In 1959 there were no serious shortages, but quite frequently meat, dairy products, even white bread were in short supply.

22. During [REDACTED] there are hardly any paved roads and the houses that ~~KWANT~~ was once able to see were poor and decrepit. While he never saw a kolchoz, his general impression was that the area around Minsk is neglected and that life must be extremely hard.

23. In addition to the university, there are several technical institutes, but ~~KWANT~~ had no opportunity of visiting them. He remembers that he once passed by a building which houses a military research institute / "voenno-nauchnyy institut"/, but without a map he was not able to describe its location.

24. The Minsk CVIR is located opposite the school no 25 or 42. It is housed in the same building as "militsiya" and occupies several offices and rooms on the first floor, room numbers 109-111. It has a very small staff, 2-3 male employees and 2 females in the "registratsiya".

25. Rather large military barracks are located on the Grushevskaya ulitsa. They can house at least a division.

26. The Jewish community of Minsk is considered the largest in the Byelorussian SSR, but is must have shrunk considerably since W. II. There is still 1 very small synagogue, which is open and attended by older people. Anti-semitism is not felt by a visitor, but local Jews told ~~KWANT~~ that in the last years of Stalin's life there were serious excesses and that rumors circulated about a mass deportation of the Jewish population to Siberia. /In 1958 ~~KWANT~~ encountered a Jewish student in Leningrad who told him that even now certain careers are closed to Jews (such as diplomatic service, military schools leading to higher ranks)./
July 1962

27. Among non-Jewish people ~~KWANT~~ heard in 1959 some rather amusing rumors : he was asked repeatedly whether it was true that Eisenhower, Rockefeller, J.P. Morgan, Ford were Jewish. When he denied this, he met with considerable scepticism.

28. ~~KWANT~~ was asked if he had any Soviet litter still in his possession, but the only thing that he could find was a trolley bus ticket /attached/. To his best recollection he has not seen any telephone directories in any public place in Minsk.

Current [REDACTED] leads in Copenhagen

29. ~~KWANT~~'s current contacts with foreign and Danish students are allegedly quite limited, because he does not attend any more the international club or other places where the students of various nationalities meet and his fiancee occupy his entire free time. The only concrete issues of possible interest are:

SECRET

~~SECRET~~ a/225 Svetlana, 21, American citizen of Russian and English, Danish national and citizen, studied in the USSR as an exchange student who got her visa extended while staying there until December 1960. She has been studying Russian for at least 3 - 4 years and has now a very fine command of the language. She lives in Hillerød, a Copenhagen suburb, precise address unknown. Her future plans are unknown.

~~SECRET~~ Jens age 32-33, possibly still in Moscow but due back soon, probably at the end of the current term. He is also an exchange student and had his visa also extended while still in the USSR. He is a teacher. He has been in the USSR repeatedly as a guide for a travel organization /International Tours?/. He has been studying Russian for a long time. Danish national and citizen.

~~SECRET~~ a/225 Svetlana, age 22-23, in general considered a young and active communist or at least a pronounced fellow-traveler. Appears to be an organizer and is very active in the Russian-language club, "Sputnik". He has been in Leningrad and has some friends there, but he has not studied there. Address unknown.

~~SECRET~~ Svetlana age 40 plus, teaches Russian language courses for beginners. Used to work in Moscow. More information is probably contained in the Copenhagen University catalog.

~~SECRET~~ a/225 Svetlana age 35-36, "cand. mag.", teaches courses of Russian language for law and/or science students.

~~SECRET~~ KWNR has no social contacts with the above and knows them only casually from the Slavic Institute.

General remarks

SO having determined that the KWNR case presents no current OPERATIONAL interest, the only still valid lesson is that contact with KWNR should have been made already in 1959, when it was first brought to the attention of the [redacted]
