Picayune (NO) - FRIDAY, February 23, 1996By: The Associated Press Edition: THIRD Section: METRO Page: B3 Word Count: 591TEXT: WDSU-TV reporter Richard Angelico was found guilty of contempt Thursday for airing the names of some witnesses who testified nearly three decades ago during a grand jury investigation into President Kennedy's assassination.Angelico was given a three-month suspended jail term and fined $100 by Criminal District Court Judge Frank Marullo.It was the second conviction in the case. On Feb. 13, Marullo found a former investigator for Jim Garrison, whose Kennedy assassination probe was fictionalized by Oliver Stone in the movie "JFK," guilty of contempt for handing the secret grand jury transcripts to Angelico.The ex-investigator, Gary Raymond, testified earlier that he kept the records for more than 20 years after District Attorney Harry Connick ordered their destruction in 1974, shortly after succeeding Garrison. Raymond said he felt the transcripts were of historical value.Raymond said he contacted Angelico after Connick told the federal Assassinations Records Review Board on June 28 that the records had disappeared during the Garrison administration.Assistant District Attorney Camille Buras said earlier that the board was told that if grand jury records still existed, they would not be turned over. Buras said Connick was referring to investigative files dealing with Garrison's probe.As part of Raymond's agreement with Angelico, the records were sent to the records board. Angelico also mailed a copy to Dallas reporter Hugh Aynesworth.Connick petitioned Marullo to find both in contempt, saying that the state's grand jury secrecy law had been violated when Raymond handed over the records and when Angelico aired the names of some of the witnesses in July.Angelico's attorney, Julian Murray, said that the secrecy law applied only to court officials, and not to reporters, who Murray said have the constitutional right to publish any information they are given.But Marullo, saying he could not find a similar case, disagreed."Without protecting the secrecy of a grand jury, why have secrecy," Marullo said. "This will hinder the prosecution of other cases. People who go before the grand jury are told that it is secret . . . and they expect it to remain secret."Marullo said the First Amendment issue concerned him, but "just because it's No. 1, doesn't mean it ranks higher than No. 3, No. 6, No. 8 or No. 10."Murray said the decision would be appealed. Raymond, who is free on bond, also is appealing his contempt citation and a six-month jail sentence.Marullo and Connick were condemned Thursday by the executive board of The Press Club of New Orleans, an organization of professional journalists and public relations people.Connick's prosecution of Angelico and Marullo's ruling are "contrary to the fundamental principles of freedom of the press and the public's right to know," the board said.The club called Marullo's ruling "abhorrent to anyone who understands
