Subject: Re: Nolan
I spoke to Stephanie Rawlett and she is going to check on Nolan. She suspected that she had seen his name, but wasn't sure if there were any files. Stephanie is also going to check with Steve Plotkins, the RFK curator. I have set up an appointment to see Stephanie (and Megan, who I left a message for, I hope) on Friday at 10:00 a.m. to discuss where they are on things. She said they should have an answer on Nolan by then.

Could you do one, discrete favor for me? Please call the JFK Library, and ask whether they have any files -- particularly in the RFK papers -- on John E. Nolan, who was an aid to RFK in the Justice Department. At this time, we are interested in anything it has on Nolan.

Very interesting material; while it contained little I didn't already know from sources, it's great to have more documentation for my book. While only a few people like myself and John Newman probably understand the significance of the material at this point, it will be a gold mine for historians in the future. You and your staff did a great job in getting this material released, and I think it will lead you to even more documents. One correction--I think I told you the wrong name of General Carroll, the head of the DIA in 1963 (he's mentioned on one of the documents you sent me, in Selected Documents #2, near the bottom of page 2, just below General Krulak). I think I told you his name was James Carroll, but that's his son (who wrote the book "American Requiem" about his father). The General's name was Joseph F. Carroll. He was ex-FBI (you might want to get this record from them), and he worked at least one case that Guy Banister also worked on. Speaking of Banister, you might want to ask the FBI to do a search for records they have about "W.W. Banister." In the book "American Swastika" by Charles Higham, about Nazi spies in America just prior to WWII, the author cites at least a couple of documents about an FBI agent "W.W. Banister" in Butte, Montana, in 1939. He's definitely referring to the man we know as Guy Banister. Thanks for the documents. I'll be sending you out some next week. I'll call you first, to arrange how I should handle explanatory notes for the documents (once I see how long they'll need to be).>>This entry makes it appear as if he left Steptoe sometime in 1963 and returned to Steptoe in 1965. His personnel records reflect that he began work at DOJ on April 10, 1963. Is any of this incorrect?<< Keep in mind that Haynes
