The Konformist Strikes Back

Robert Sterling Welcome to the Konformist, the internet e-mail magazine specializing in investigative journalism. For those who read any of my earlier works, hello again. For those who haven't, hello. First, an answer to the biggest question I've been getting for awhile: no, The Man has not silenced me. Unless, that is, The Man conspired with a bunch of businesses to keep me occupied with lots of work. (Wouldn't that be just like Him.) The sad truth is I have been both occupied with work and am easily amused (a bad combination for anyone starting any venture.) But I am now ready to return to my goal of making the Konformist the biggest underground magazine in the world. (And yes, I would like this to become a print magazine.) The current plan is for the Konformist to mail out on an irregular basis as often as possible. I have a backlog of articles from others that I will use, as well as my own. I may not go to full capacity until December 1, when AOL goes on unlimited time service. And now, the news. So what has happened since the last issue of the Konformist? Well, a little paper called the San Jose Mercury has alleged that (gasp!!! horror!!!) the CIA was behind the crack epidemic. Two months later (after giving the story less space than they've devoted to John Bobbit's penis), the Washington Post, New York Times, and Los Angeles Times all launched their scooped top-notch investigative staffs... to defend the CIA. No, the big three spoke in unison, Gary Webb and the Merc were wrong in their story, the poor defenseless CIA has nothing to do with drug dealing of any sort, and this was clearly a hatchet job by an out-of-control media. What's worse, the story MAY ACTUALLY BE BELIEVED by some, especially in the black community, who we all know are a delusional group easily tricked into thinking that people in power are corrupt liars. As proof that the CIA-Contra-L.A. crack connection was bogus, they used information supplied by the CIA and former Contra leaders, both of whom are impartial witnesses. Well, I guess that settles that. After all, if the Post, NY Times, and LA Times all agree on a story, they must be right. Meanwhile, in another story which has gotten more ink than the CIA-crack link, Mark Fuhrman, coming out of his bunker from the neo-Nazi capital of Sand Points, Idaho, denied he was a racist in a chummy interview with Nixon-suckup Diane Sawyer. He explained that when he talked on tape about planting evidence to arrest blacks and his desire to commit genocide, he was merely "playing a role". Apparently Mr. Fuhrman is quite a creative guy, as he also admitted a lifelong desire to be an artist. Yet another thing he has in common with Hitler. In Atlanta, Georgia, during the rush to protect the investment of GE, Coca Cola, and AT&T in a ready-for-prime-time celebration of athletic prowess, mindless consumer
