Feinsilber got the fax, is interested, and will arrange to have a courier pick the packet up tomorrow at 9:00 a.m. He was eager to have it first thing Wednesday morning. He asked, so without going into too much detail, I gave him a general idea of what he will be receiving. He understood and appreciated that the drafts are interesting in their own right, but that there are some, particularly in the research community, that will find the drafts and edits extremely interesting. He said something like "and that's exactly what you do -- get the documents out there so people can draw their own conclusions." He knows we are not making any judgments about the edits themselves.
