Subject: Brian's last day...

I'm doing it again. I said I would never organize anything again, and now I am trying it again. But Brian doesn't really have a team leader to do this for him, so I guess it falls to his office mate and foil (me) to do this. His last day is Friday, and tradition and courtesy dictate that we acknowledge that it some way. I know that everybody is pretty much sick to death of the potluck things we have done on numerous of these type occasions. However, we all also know that trying to get Brian to do something outside of the office with his colleagues is about as easy as trying to get Biggie Smalls and Tupac together for a formal dinner (well, as hard as it would have been before each of them was killed). I think if we try to go off site, I think we will be minus one guest of honor. So, our best bet is to do something small here-- such as maybe a pizza party (or subs... geez, here we go again!). I WILL NOT be in charge of deciding which type of food we get, but I will organize everything else, including arranging for and picking up the food once it is decided what we're getting. I suggest a mid-afternoon type of get together maybe in the lobby, similar to what we have done in the past. Perhaps someone (someone higher up on the food chain and thus more financially endowed than myself) could arrange for a book or something of the like for him. Or, we could do contributions this week. Anyway, keep Friday afternoon around 3-ish free. Thank you all so very, very much, and remember-- "... every time a bell rings, an angel gets his wings." -- Jimmy Stewart, "It's A Wonderful Life", 1946
