Subject: J-Track Musings

Body: As I was going over the J-Track, it occurred to me that it might be useful to make some ex post facto entries there recording work/projects already completed before you created the Track. I don't suggest this for the purpose of creating a lot of unnecessary work; rather, if you intend for the J-Track to be a relatively complete, one-stop historical record of our work what we did once the Board goes out of existence, it seems to me that we need to make some retroactive entries to complete the record -- at least for major initiatives. We might as well get credit for the stuff we've done. . . What do you think?
