CUBA PROJECT PROGRESS REPORT

4 - 11 April 1962

OPERATIONAL

1. An internal leader of the Movimiento Recuperacion Revolucionario (MRR) who was infiltrated into Cuba on 29 December 1961, and exfiltrated on 29 March 1962, said at a debriefing on 7 April that he considers only five clandestine resistance programs organizations in Cuba of national importance: The Directorio Revolucionario Estudantil (DRE), Movimiento Democrate/Cristiano (MDC), Movimiento Revolucionario del Pueblo (MRP), Movimiento Recuperacion Revolucionario (MRE), and the 30th of November Only these groups have the necessary motivation and discipline to coordination among themselves. There are a large number of other underground revolutionary which claim to be of national importance but which have no more than two or three dozen men at most and can be found only in the area where they were established. Most of the small been established by self-named leaders for personal reasons, financial gain through the sale of 'bonds, "or for future political opportunity when shot Fidel, Castro is overthrown. Although the small groups are relatively inactive, their claims to importance have attracted numerous dissidents who could be more useful if they were members of the few larger and more effective organizations. geographic dispersion of the units; these small groups could never be effectively merged into a centrally directed larger unit. To use them effectively we would have to try to siphon off the membership to controlled groups. If this is not possible, they may serve a useful purpose by providing unwitting diversionary harrassment while the larger groups work toward the major goals.

- 2. A unilaterally recruited senior officer of the diplomatic service of a neutralist African country has been briefed and given training in secret writing and communications to assist him in reporting on our objectives in Cuba. He is now in Havana from where he plans to travel to great of interest to us.

Following are highlights from selected interrogations of Cuban refugees processed through the Caribbean Admission Center (CAC) at opa-locka, Florida. This information is secured entirely from untrained observers and is presented partly as original unconfirmed data and partly as a supplement to intelligence already received from controlled reliable sources. All CAC information is screened for use in the daily and weekly Cuban summaries. During the past week the lateral 1309 Cuban retrigees through Miami, paspared 263 preliminary interrogation reports and disseminated 135 information reports.

- 8. Numerous reports confirm that all towns have been partitioned into "blocks" infiltrated by communist informants under the direction of block chiefs of the "Comite de Defensa." The informant system also block chiefs of the "Comite de Defensa." The informant system also block chiefs of the "Comite de Defensa." The informant system also block chiefs of the "Comite de Defensa." The informant system also block chiefs as witchboards as witchboards established in the telephone centrals of every town. One refugee from the Cuban Telephone Company described a switchboard panel in the "Principe plant" in Havana which was monitoring "20 or 30 positions." These informants, their chiefs, members of the militia, G-2, "chivates" (provocation agents), and other Castro supporters are now generally labeled by the populace as communists rather than Castro ists.
- 9. While the network of informants protects the home front, officials of the National Directorate of the IntegratedRevolutionary

 Organization (ORI) are increasingly occupied with the export of Castroistcommunism to the Western Hemisphers. Flight manifests of Cubana

 Airlines show that 'hundreds of Latin Americans are being brought to Cuba for training and indoctrination. "In addition to regular commercial transportation, charter flights to service these persons are being run thrice monthly throughout South America. In order to avoid Cuban visas and entry-exit stamps in their passports, these persons are given visas on a separate sheetyof paper. In Cuba all arrangements are made for them by the Instituto Cubano de Amistad con los Pueblos (ICAP).

- 10. Soviet military equipment has been reported in increasingly larger quantities and wider disbursement. One refugee said that he saw '20 or 25 wheel-mounted Soviet 100 mm field guns M-55 (identified from photographs) at a militia camp at Miranda near Camaguey.
- Shortages of certain essential food items have resulted in widespread protests and, in a few instances, to open action by those directly affected. A group of '13 to 15 women' reportedly waylaid a milk truck, overpowered the driver, and each carried off two liters of milk.
- 12. Refugees described the existence of three resistance organizations, allegedly widespread in membership but limited in action. One, the Movimiento de Recuperacion Revolucionario Militar (MRRM) is a group which has broken away from the Movimiento de Recuperacion Revolucionario (MRR). Reportedly, its objective is to apprehend key.

 Castro leaders when the time is appropriate. MRRM is organized in all provinces except Matanzas and Camaguey where the movement has now begun to develop a following. The second organization, the Movimiento Democratico Cristiano (MDC), is described as oriented along traditional Christian democratic lines: It is said to have a "national coordinator, a national executive, provincial, military and political coordinators, and resistance chiefs." They claim that military and counter-revolutionary activities have been limited because of lack of equipment. A third organization, the Unidad Revolucionario (UR), is reported to be carrying out the sabotage of sugar fields by burning, using a small incendiary device made of gelatin, match heads, potassium permanganate tablets, and glycerine.
