Diaz advised that the MIRR, under the leadership of Dr. Orlando Bosch Avila, was not cooperating or participating in any manner in his, Diaz's, plans. Diaz regarded Bosch as a "crazy man" who was engaged in a war with the US government, and who had the complex of another Fidel Castro. Diaz recalled that several weeks ago he did have some negotiations with Bosch but that the real purpose of these negotiations was to obtain some equipment from him. He described Bosch as being a Cuban racketeer, who was collecting money from his fellow Cuban exiles under false pretenses.
