Reurairtel 9/19/61.

The Bureau appreciates that during your early contacts with [ ] it was necessary to exercise care with respect to the questions asked so you would not disclose to him more information than you obtained from him. Reairtel indicates that in view of later developments this problem is not as great as it was previously.

The Bureau desires to point out that even though the informant may now appear more at ease with the Agents and more trustful of them, you should still continue to exercise extreme caution in your conversations with him so you will not disclose information in Bureau files during the course of these conversations.

With respect to the suggestion contained in the penultimate paragraph of reairtel you are advised that it is not felt that dissemination of information received from the informant can be held in abeyance until the conditions of this suggestion are completely fulfilled in all instances. It is being delayed in other instances until more specific facts can be obtained by your office from the informant. It is expected that this practice will continue to be followed in the future.

If you have not already done so, suairtel immediately furnishing information requested in Buairtel of 9/15/61.
