KEYPUNCHED

1. Contact established, eventho PETUNIA was standing on the wrong side of the metro station and get his part of the recognition phrases wrong. Explained that he had been busy on the 3rd and thought it better to stay where he was than to leave to meet CHALEMSKY. Had prepared notes on his contacts (had had initial difficulty in finding anyone, finally called Susan George and get reintroduced into the circle).

2. Larry COX: Cox runs a hang-out in Pantin for deserters, SDS activists, resisters and casuàls passing through Paris, address is 3, r. Gabrielle Jasserand in Pantin [Paris suburb -- this address figured in an UNDERBID report on the arrest of some deserters for possession of drugs]. Did not know how long this house has been in operation; rent is 1200 frs/mo [$240.]. Cox spends a lot of time making the contributions circuit to raise money to pay for the house -- mentioned having got $100 from Sartre, some money from de Beauvoir (no figure mentioned) and 1500 frs from Katherine Deneuve [movie actress]. Cox also gets support from Resist in the States and is now negotiating with Resist to get them to pick up the monthly rent as a form of support. (No names mentioned in this context.) Also gets some very modest support from the Monthly Review, most of it in the form of books and periodicals for their political use (and presumably, sales -- if possible). Mike Spiegel of National SDS was in town this last year, Cox said (no date) and said he would try to get them support from the States.

Cox himself first came to Paris to take French lessons prior to assignment somewhere in Africa with one of the church-identified international voluntary service organizations. After 6 mos of language, he decided that he wanted to remain in Paris and proposed to his sponsors that he be allowed to work here among deserters and draft resisters (the letter of proposal described this in social work terms, but Cox said he didn't hide what he planned to do and in fact let his sponsors know; he didn't expect them to approve it). The group in effect turned their heads to the political implications of Cox' work, and agreed to let him stay in Paris on salary ($240. month); they asked for monthly reports, which he has not sent them. Of his $240, he contributes $40 to the food budget of the house.

There are 20 deserters/resisters who live in the house, and PETUNIA described them as a bunch of apolitical bums. Most of the good, politically minded deserters work in France to save money to buy false documentation and passage to Canada, then leave. Those who remain behind aren't interested in politics and aren't capable of much. From one girl who hangs out with this group he got various anecdotes of life among the deserters: one sends letters to Mao Tse-tung informing him that 1000 men in Canada, 15,000 in Alaska and others in France who are preparing to take over the US and are in training at the moment ("math class from 9-10 this morning") and asking Mao to send some divisions to help the invasion; another went on a starvation diet and saved every penny he could find (to buy his way out of France), then went off and bought a monkey ($40); another always pulls a knife on people, and threatens to go back into the Army if not allowed to play his game. From Cox, PETUNIA learned that Philip Wagner is in Canada -- he saved enough, or was able to find someone to bankroll him, and went to Canada. PETUNIA got the impression that this was under false documentation (which can be bought for $300.). (No names or hints of where one can get this documentation.)

Everyone displays the usual paranoia on the subject of CIA. Larry and others are positive that there is an agent in the house; they are very suspicious of each other and play games trying to trip each other up. They claim that within 24 hours after a deserter has arrived in France, the Embassy knows everything about him.

Cox has a Swiss fiancée who plans to join him soon in Paris; she is studying educational psychology in Geneva with an d/i professor there who Cox said was about to set off a revolution in this field. They both want to go to the States, and Cox talked about going there when she finishes in Geneva. He wants to work in a factory and get involved in organizing within the movement. Since he has refused induction 3 times, he expects legal action to be taken against him when he returns (and wondered whether 'they' would also get him for aiding and abetting desertion within the army). He described his major work here as dealing with deserters and resisters, trying to educate them and get them involved in the movement, and in working with GIs in Germany, encouraging them to desert. A few GI's on R&R have stayed at the house in Pantin

Described life & times in Paris as tough, but getting a little better now. Most of the deserters want to leave and none of those here are here for political reasons. Cox made a trip to Sweden last winter (by microbus), and met the ADC there. Said nobody likes Sweden (lousy weather, no work, lousy people eventho they get a warm reception).

2. Ed DUBINSKY:

Former math prof at Tulane (got fired for taking part in some protest -- on the racial issue?). Was in Warsaw earlier this summer for an international mathematician's conference, came to Paris and plans to go to Cambridge and then to Canada where he has a job offer (in Montreal). While in Warsaw, met a Polish woman (age 32, Andreajea B---; married, three children; former funcationary of the PZPR but forced out because of Jewish origins), and he is considering marrying her. She has asked him to come back to Warsaw and live. He mentioned a strong possibility that he would be invited to teach or do research at the Univ of Warsaw (apparently something of a center for higher math), and said for personal and professional reasons he'd love to go -- this would be sometime around 1970/71. Thinks of living in the UK or Israel with his new Polish wife after that; probably UK. Dubinsky was quasi-invited to a meeting here with the Viets, which is why he was in Paris. Before leaving the States he got letters of introduction from Robert Greenblatt and Mel Rukak Rothenberg to Mme Than Van Pham. Dubinsky had been contacted by Dubinsky about a meeting of mathematicians with the Viets "(to discuss the state of higher math in Vietnam and life in general" [this apparently said with a straight face!], which he billed to PETUNIA as an apolitical meeting "to prepare for American-Viet relations after the war". Dubinsky was supposed to meet Greenblatt in Paris, but he can't find him and can't find anyone who knows him...so he's taken to sitting in cafes in hopes Greenblatt with walk past! If Greenblatt and the meeting don't show up soon, he's going to leave for Cambridge. He is reluctant to contact the Viets directly despite the two letters of introduction since he says he'd not give the time of day to anyone who just appeared at his door -- with or without letters. [His position was reinforced by Susan George, who agreed; George added that she didn't know Than Van Pham.]

3. Martha BULTMAN:

Met on 20 June (address: 4, ave. Hoche; tel CAR 42-84). Said her father John Hess had just written a book on De Gaulle and his foreign policy; was rather proud of his father. Said "my father would be considered to be extreme left in the US, but actually he is cautious if even a conservative in many ways." Said her parents were ~~zzzix~~ very suspicious and had always told always to be careful since you never could tell when someone works for the CIA. Described her father as having a tremendous amount of knowlêdge about a great many things, which is reflected in his writing. He can easily argue an opposing viewpoint, and does in social conversations for the fun of it. They travel a good deal, using Paris as hoêe. Last year, her parents went to Amsterdam and Switzerland and are planning to go to Amsterdam again. Hess started out in Latin America, twenty or so years ago. At one time he worked in Cuba making cigars or something (PETUNIA: that's a direct quotel); speaks Spanish perfectly. Martha commented: "of course he is very sympathetic toward radical youth and the revolutionary movement in general, but has a critical spittit." He supposed to be very strict about not imposing on people he knows, and would never send one friend to contact another. Had dinner one night (apparently recently); with Mary McCarthy and husband (chez Hess). Commented McCarthy is very bourgeoisie; her husband is quiet and looks like Clay Shaw. McCarthy feels that the NVNese have handled their propaganda rather badly on the war, and Hess agreed (no elaboration).

Martha is sympathetic towards the deserters and resisters in Paris, says there are 13 or 14 who are the real committed ones, but about 60 who are in the Paris 'movement group'. McCarthy apparently has pretty good contact with the movement, and is at least in contact with some resisters; said that she'd mentioned Cox's name once.

Martha works for SDS in New Orleans, but is tired of their rhetoric; she can't stand PLP people. Mentioned Sue Munaker (another PETUNIA contact) had written a 40 page essay on the Women's Liberation Movement to be published in some forthcoming book on the student left. Martha knows Dubinsky.

4. Susan GEORGE:

Met Susan George on 24 June (address 42 r. du Cherche-Midi; phone number LIT 48-01). Discussed banning of PACS last October: she said the leader of the MDPL (Claude Bourdet) suggested that PACS members joined the MDEB; there had been no little hesitation after the French had tossed Croyell out but people were now gravitating toward the MDPL which is composed of individuals from almost every political grouping. The MDPL's basic issue is of course Vietnam, though at base the movement is committed to an anti-imperialist, anti-capitalist position. George described it as a very flexible organization with no structured leaders or administrative committees so that it can avoid the bureaucratic indecision of old PACS leadership groups. MDPL members are developing "political consciousness" and have passed the point of regarding the Vietnam war as just a 'mistake'.

George, herself, was working at the American College at in the Registrar's office; said there were about a half dozen radicals in the College, she knows them and is sympathetic toward their efforts. Claims the school's administrator is a "paranoic dictator". She resigned after the principal of the school accused her of "conspiratorial counseling". Has done translating work, but ~~prefers~~ prefers more "active" and less "confining" jobs. She has received an advance from Beacon Press to write a book on American deserters in France. When PETUNIA asked her where her income really came from, she replied that she lives off her husband!

The tone of the conversation with her, PETUNIA commented, was very pro-VNese; she said they have offered "magnanimous gestures to work with the American people after the war is over". Feels that they are handling the war and the negotiations brilliantly. She frequently sees "her Vietnamese friends", and they have told her they are very satisfied with the progress of the struggle and its certain outcome. Mentioned that she would see her friends the next day to get their reactions/approval to a circular prepared for distribution advertising the 4 July meeting. Also said she had just talked with her friends last night about the meeting, and was sure that they would approve the circular.

Misc: she made a tape for Pacifica Corp on "the war and resistance, you know...". said that a Paris law student who is giving legal help and draft counselling to resisters in Paris (!); name not mentioned. said that last year she was mostly tied up with PACS and didn't work with "Marxist Study Groups". Plans to go to the US in August to visit her mother.

5. John KSK LNU:

Deserter from Army whom PETUNIA met in the Luxembourg by chance. Claimed he was in security in the Army and was one of two who had broken a Russian code; because he had a German girlfriend and had gone off for several weekends with her (AWOL), he was thrown in jail. Left about a year ago, he said, and has been in France for 7 months. Has no money and few possessions; is looking for ways to get $300 with which to buy papers to go to Canada where he wants to settle. While in France, he has been living off rich old women. Was living in the ADC house in Pantin but got thrown out because he was an acid-head and was bringing pot home. (PETUNIA commented you have to be pretty bad to get thrown out of that house.) Claimed to be from Cleveland, originally. Said that some French movie actress puts up the money for the deserters' house and contributes to their funds. PETUNIA described him as a real crackpot and potentially dangerous. Has no place to stay in Paris and is thinking about going south for a while; mentioned that "we" have a couple of colonies in Toulouse.

6. Maria JOLAS:

Met on 2 July. Jolas asked about the movement in the States and concluded that the radicals can't afford to bicker like children (with reference to the SDS/PLP split. Said she thought the PL position with respect to the NVNese and the war was ridiculous -- made no other comments on the American movement.

Said that what happened to "Max" was regrettable, but that his tactics were deplorable. He virtually snubbed his nose at the French police.

Said that she felt the American movement had largely forgotten the war and that more work against the war was being done in Paris than in the US. Mentioned the Paris movement was pretty well coordinated and ready to go with coordinated demonstrations to time with those held in the US, last fall, but the MOB simply failed to keep in touch with them. Said that this was no fault of Dave Beillinger's, whose credentials were impeccable, but he does need an organizational secretary behind him. Nevertheless, she lamented the fact that many people from the old PACS were frightened away after the French banned it (afraid of losing passports or being tossed out), and not everyone had joined Bourdet's outfit.

7. Anti-Vietnam Meetings:

On 24 June, a group collected at Claude Bourdet's home to use his address file to send out invitations to the 4 July meeting. Bourdet's address file comprises approximately 1,500 names and addresses; Bourdet commented that he had a separate file for French communist party members. Working at the meeting were Susan George, Dean Savage, Ralph Fischer and Elizabeth LNU [Adler?]. Fischer Savage is a physics teacher at a Jr. College in Brooklyn; visiting Paris. Savage is married to a Yugoslav girl; he writes for the Guardian, about 25 years old, clean shaven, bright but cold. On others, see above.

On 3 July, another group collected to work up posters for the meeting. Involved then were: Cox, Dubinsky, Elizabeth LNU, Susan George, Jolas, a deserter, a resister and 2 girls. No names for the latter four. PETUNIA picked up the info that the deserter was from Vietnam, he held a factory job, his father is a good friend of Westmoreland's.

On 4 July, the meeting took place: it alternated speakers and texts: one hour, someone read the names of American war dead; second hour, someone read from texts provided by the Vietnamese. On the latter point, there was a last minute change of tactics by the Viets. The original idea had been a political wake for the American dead and for those in Vietnamese villages bombed by the Americans. Thus: the names of the war dead and the names of bombed villages would be read out. At the last moment, the Viets told Susan George that the names of bombed villages had now "political significance", and instead they'd rather the meeting read aloud from material marked in red by the Viets. George went along with the idea, though Jolas among others didn't like it since it altered the purpose and impact of the meeting. Nonetheless, the Viet alteration was accepted. Very few people attended the 4 July meeting; PETUNIA wasn't impressed at all. Everyone signed two books open in the back of the room: one called for an end to the war; a second was a pledge of support to the Viets. Everyone signed, and the Viets took this book back with them. Three Viets appeared during the day, sat quietly in the back of the room and said little to anyone other than themselves, and left not long after they'd arrived. One of the three returned that evening to collect the signature book. After the meeting was over at midnight, everyone went their separate ways.

8. Julia Herve-Wright

Anecdote from Dubinsky. Dubinsky said he first met ^{Herve} ~~metzger~~ in Ghana (where Dubinsky was for a while doing social work). While there he also met someone else he described as, at the time, his best friend. Later he heard from ~~Wright~~/Herve that his friend had been the one who killed Richard Wright. Dubinsky did not mention the name, but said the episode is described in the biography on Wright. He at first refused to believe Julia Herve's assertion but later became convinced of it. His friend never denied the guilt, and did admit to being a CIA agent. Wright was killed by the CIA because he had just finished a manuscript on the use of American blacks abroad by the government.

9. Other:

- a. From his girlfriend, PETUNIA learned that Rene Mayer has "disappeared"; he has apparently left France and no one knows where he is.
- b. The Lancaster family whom PETUNIA met last time is now in Brazil.
- c. Asked me to check on Barrio -- nobody answers at their phone number.
- d. raised the problem of his hernia and draft status -- see cable.
- e. schedule agreed to: he'll be back on or about the 1st and will let me know via postcard (innocuous and wish you were here variety, scribbled signature) what date he'll be back. Site and time of meeting arranged.
- f. Said he was about out of money; agreed to get together very briefly the following day so I could give him some money.
