MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT : Report of Meeting with Sergio Rojas

REFERENCE: 20-
[REDACTED] 3801 (NY 17910), 24 September 1960

1. When it was learned here that Rojas was intending to go to Miami and there to stay with Ricardo Loria, it was thought it might be best to talk to him before he visits Miami so as to somewhat condition his thinking before he is exposed to the full blast of anti-CIA sentiment which he is certain to get from Loria and his associates. I telephoned Rojas in New York on 26 September, using the incredible recognition phrase given in Paragraph 5 of reference, and he agreed to stop off in Washington en route to Miami 27 September.

2. I met with Rojas for several hours in the Sheraton-Carlton Hotel on 27 September. Rojas began our conversation with a lengthy discourse intending to establish a picture of himself as a complete neutral among the opposing Cuban exile groups, he not being a member of any group and heavily endowed with objectivity. As a matter of fact in the course of our discussion he spoke with seeming objectivity, but in balance clearly favored the point of view of those young revolutionaries of the type who now make up the Alianza de Liberacion, who find themselves rejecting and rejected by the FED. He is well acquainted with the history of the MRR's part in the formation of the FED, the initial election of ABINDEF-1 to represent the MRR, and what occurred later to create the split of the MRR with the FED. He presented the usual argument that the MRR had made a bad mistake in allowing ABINDEF-1 to be their representative in the FED, and ABINDEF-1 was subsequently captured by the politicos and came finally to a point of representing only his own views and interests in the FED, largely to the detriment of the MRR interests. (This argument, which was as well presented by Rojas as I've ever heard it, is accurate. It is the thing which we have tended to sweep under the rug and perhaps have not taken sufficient notice of the fact that the MRR dissidents, so called, which were expelled from the FED, was in fact the hard core of the original MRR.) Rojas spoke at length about the Alianza also and said that he had talked with a number of these people in New York the day before. He loudly lamented the fact that a number of valuable young men, particularly of the military type, are being wasted as a result of these differences which exist between the young revolutionaries and the FED, as he put it. I told him that I agreed with him but that I thought that the solution for these military types was simple -- i.e., if they would present themselves as individuals offering their services to the FED that they would be accepted and their valuable services would be put to good use. Examples in this case were Chaves, Diaz Leal, Diaz Diaz, et al. (Presumably, Rojas was completely unaware of Rino Diaz's mission.) I suggested in this connection that people of this type were being victimized by such people as Luis Conte Aguirre who in support of their political aspirations are using these military type for window-dressing and political bargaining fodder.

Rojas seemed somewhat impressed with this argument and I suggested that he might use whatever influence he had to influence people like Cañosa, whom he described as being centrist in New York, to return to the point of threatened suicide, to break away from the position of joining the FID.

3. Rojas then began to speak of the basic differences between again what he calls the young revolutionaries, meaning the original 26th-of-July Movement people, and the politicos, such as Turiso, Sanchez Arengo, et al, whom they refer to as "los Viejos". The young revolutionaries feel that with "los Viejos" in power that Cuba will slide backwards toward the old political regimes and that these latter are only giving lip service to the proposition that the original aims of the revolution must go forward but without Castro and, of course, without any Communist influence. Rojas curiously referred to these politicos in one hand as going too far to the right. I said that this view was completely contrary to the view held by most who consider them to be liberals considerably far to the left. I added that if these people were any more to the left, they would be a source of serious worry to the U. S. Government. Rojas changed the subject.

4. He wanted then to know if it would be advisable for the U. S. Government to lend its support to more than one group. When I responded that the U. S. Government was not supporting any group, Rojas just shrugged. He went on to say that if support could be given to individuals such as the military types he had mentioned previously and perhaps to the Alianza, for example, as a whole organization (aliance of Cuban exiles pitch!), that this would not only gain the services of very valuable people in the fight against Castro but might sow the seeds of political stability for the future. He pointed out that if the young revolutionaries who are now rejected by the FED are stifled in their efforts to contribute to the anti-Castro struggle, they will represent a brilliant anti-American show almost for the future, which could be very damaging to U. S./Cuban relations. I think there is a fair amount of substance to this argument and I told him so. In any case, Rojas was given the Russell memorandum. I. involvement in these exile affairs (which, of course, he does not buy) and advised that he do whatever he can to bring about unity as between several groups. He was told that the FED appeared to be the group which had the greatest organization and greatest apparent potential for success, and that all concerned would be well advised to attempt to make peace with it. Rojas said that he had a strong feeling that unity on this basis was not possible at this time because the feeling among the young revolutionaries was running too high and too emotionally against the FED. He said he thought these young revolutionaries feel that they have been turned out by self-seeking politicos, and their friends and contacts in the U. S. Government have turned their backs and abandoned them. Because of this they are suffering bitterness and disillusionment. Rojas then suggested that perhaps I would be willing to arrange a meeting for him with some representatives of the FED, specifically this was not to be one of the five principals. He could meet with me in an attempt to referee their differences and reestablish relationships and cooperation with the FED. I told him that this was an interesting suggestion but I thought it was not possible inasmuch as the U. S. Government, while

It maintains a continuous interest in these affairs and has occasional contact with the several groups, is not and will not become involved. Rojas said he knows this to be untrue but is dissuaded by the insistence that the U. S. Government is not supporting the FDLR. I made the counter-suggestion to him that he induce his friends, Zulu, Mario Moreno and Lorie, to approach the FBI again and attempt on their own to work some accommodation. In doing so, I suggested they might consider claiming the services of an older, more sophisticated, native individual who they could trust to represent them in these overtures to the FBI. I felt I thought that the DIA's difficulties, for example, stem from poor representation. I believe that Rojas immediately mentalized himself in this role. Our discussions ended at this point.

S. Rojas said that he was planning to stay in Miami only a few days, after which he would return to London. He said further that if as a result of his visit here he became convinced that he again contributes substantially to this Cuban exile situation in the U. S., he would return; otherwise, he plans to remain in Florida and attempt to find employment there. In Miami he stated he will stay with Lorie, whose NY phone number is Canal 6-0454.
