MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT : Report of Meeting with Sergio Rojas

REFERENCE: [REDACTED] 301 (IN 179120), 26 September 1960

21-1

1. When it was learned here that Rojas was intending to go to Miami and there to stay with Raul de Lario, it was thought it might be best to talk to him before he visits Miami so as to summarize condition his thinking before he is exposed to the full blast of anti-CIA sentiment which he is certain to get from Larios and his associates. I telephoned Rojas in New York on 25 September, using the incredible recognition phrase given in Paragraph 5 of reference, and he agreed to stay off in Washington en route to Miami 27 September.

2. I met with Rojas for several hours in the Statues-Carlton Hotel on 27 September. Rojas began our conversation with a lengthy discourse intending to establish a picture of himself as a complete neutral among the opposing Cuban exile groups, as not being a member of any group and heavily endowed with objectivity. As a matter of fact in the course of our discussions he spoke with seeming objectivity, but in balance clearly favored the point of view of those young revolutionaries of the type who now make up the Alianza de Liberacion, who find themselves rejecting and rejected by the FID. He is well acquainted with the history of the MPR's part in the formation of the FID, the initial selection of ANFIDOL-1 to represent the MPR, and what occurred later to create the split of the MPR with the FID. He presented the usual argument that the MPR had made a bad mistake in allowing ANFIDOL-1 to be their representative in the FID, and ANFIDOL was subsequently captured by the political and came finally to a point of representing only his own views and interests in the FID, largely to the exclusion of the MPR interests. (This argument, which was as well presented by Rojas as I've ever heard it, is accurate. It is the thing which we have tended to sweep under the rug and perhaps have not taken sufficient notice of the fact that the MPR dissidents, so called, which were expelled from the FID, was in fact the hard core of the original MPR.) Rojas spoke at length about the Alianza also and said that he had talked with a number of these people in New York the day before. He loudly lamented the fact that a number of valuable young men, particularly of the military type, are being wasted as a result of these differences which exist between the young revolutionaries and the FID, as he put it. I told him that I agreed with him but that I thought that the solution for these military types was simple - i.e., if they would present themselves as individuals offering their services to the FID that they would be accepted and their valuable services would be put to good use. Examples in this case were Chaves, Luis Diaz, Dino Diaz, et al. (Presumably, Rojas was completely unaware of Luis Diaz's mission.) I suggested in this connection that people of this type were being victimized by such people as Luis Coto Aguirre who in support of their political aspirations are using these military types for violence-dressing and political bargaining fodder.

Rojas seemed somewhat surprised with this argument so I suggested that he might use whatever influence he has to influence people like Chaves, whom he described as being moderate in New York and sympathetic to the point of threatened suicide, to break away from the politicos and join the PRD.

3. Rojas then began to speak of the basic differences between again what he calls the young revolutionaries, meaning the original 26th of July Movement people, and the politicos, such as Vargas, Lopez Arango, et al, whom they refer to as "Los Viejos". The young revolutionaries feel that with "Los Viejos" in power that Cuba will slide backwards toward the old political regimes and that there "after are many people giving service to the proposition that the original aims of the revolution must go forward but without Castro and, of course, without any Communist influence. Rojas curiously referred to these politicos as the PDC as being too far to the right. I said that this view of theirs was completely contrary to the view held by most who consider them to be liberals (moderates) far to the left. I added that if these people were up, some to the left, they would be a source of serious worry to the U. S. Government. Rojas changed the subject.

4. He wanted then to know if it would be possible for the U. S. Government to lend its support to more than one group. When I responded that the U. S. Government was not supporting any group, Rojas just shrugged. He went on to say that if support could be given to individuals such as the military types he had mentioned previously and persons to the Alianza, for example, as a whole organization (persons at both Aguirre pitch!), that this would not only gain the services of many valuable people in the right against Castro but might also the means of political stability for the future. He pointed out that if the young revolutionaries who are now rejecting the PCT are stifled in their efforts to contribute to the anti-Castro struggle, they will represent a built-in anti-American Cuban element for the future, which could be very damaging to U. S./Cuban relations. I think there is a fair amount of substance to this argument and I told him so. In my case, Rojas was given the "mission" regarding U. S. involvement in these exile affairs (which, of course, he does not try), and since that he do whatever he can to bring about unity as between several groups. He was told that the PDC appeared to be the group with the greatest organization and greatest apparent potential for success, and that all successes would be well received to attempt to re-establish U. S. ties. Rojas said that he had a strong feeling that unity on this basis was not possible at this time because the feeling among the young revolutionaries was running too high and too emotionally against the PDC. He said he thought these young revolutionaries feel that they have been thrown out, marginalized, ostracized, and their friends and contacts in the U. S. Government have turned their backs and abandoned them. Because of this they are suffering bitterness and disillusionment. Rojas then suggested that perhaps I would be willing to arrange a meeting for him with some representatives of the PDC, specifically this was not to be one of the five principals, who could meet with me in an attempt to reflect their differences and re-establish relationships and cooperation with the PDC. I told him that his was an interesting suggestion but I thought it was not possible. However as the U. S. Government, while it maintains a continuous interest in these affairs and has occasional contact with the several groups, is not and will not become involved. Rojas said he knew this to be untrue and is convinced at the insistence that the U. S. Government is not sponsoring the ABM. I made the counter-suggestion to him that he induce his friends, e.g., Celia Haynes and Lorie, to approach the FED again and attempt on their own to make some accommodation. In doing so, I suggested they might consider obtaining the services of an older, more sophisticated, mature individual whom they could trust to represent them in these overtures to the FED. I said I thought that the XER's difficulties, for example, stem from poor representation. I believe that Rojas immediately mentalized himself in this role. Our discussions ended at this point.

S. Rojas said that he was planning to stay in Miami only a few days, after which he would return to London. He said further that if as a result of his visit here he became convinced that he could contribute substantially to this Cuban exile situation in the U. S., he would return; otherwise, he plans to remain in Europe and attempt to find employment there. In Miami he stated he will stay with Lorie, whose new phone number is CANal 6-0161.
