Re: JUNTA REVOLUCIONARIA CUBANA (JURE)
INTERNAL SECURITY - CUBA
NEUTRALITY MATTERS

FRANCISCO M. MELENDEZ, Deputy Collector, United States Customs, Ponce, Puerto Rico, on January 17, 1964, advised that a week or so before the "Venus" arrived in Ponce, RAMON E. DAPENA VIDAL, described by MELENDEZ as an insurance agent in Ponce, came to the offices of United States Customs. DAPENA requested information as to the requirements for becoming or acting as an agent for a ship coming into Ponce. DAPENA had no information concerning the ship's cargo nor did he know where the ship was coming from. Based on the fact that little was known about the ship, Customs said the vessel could enter but that the agent would have to place a bond of $10,000. This was done.

ALBERTO A. PICO, Supervisory Customs Agent, United States Customs, Ponce, Puerto Rico, on January 17, 1964, advised that DAPENA had come into the Customs office about two weeks before the "Venus" arrived in Ponce and requested information concerning becoming an agent for a ship. PICO furnished him with the necessary documents to be completed by DAPENA and gave him information concerning the obtaining of a bond. PICO explained that ships entering United States ports, when the cargo was not known, were placed under bond to insure that no goods on which there is a duty would be unloaded before checked by Customs.

According to PICO, it was determined, when the ship arrived, that she carried no cargo. On the after deck she carried 10-15 empty oil drums. The ship, on arrival, was yellow in color and PICO noted that the ship, while in Ponce, had been repainted and now has a blue hull with a grey superstructure.
