MEMORANDUM FOR: Chief, Special Affairs Staff

SUBJECT : AMWORLD--Project JMHART

1. Chief, WH/7 has tentatively offered the services of CIA contract personnel assigned to this project--principally those of the [redacted] to serve as a channel to ex-President Figueres and Foreign Minister Cuduber in promoting the acceptability of AMWORLD and AMBIDDY-1 by the moderate left. Under the terms of the JMHART Project, CIA, through [redacted] will be able to influence the [redacted]

b. It is proposed that [redacted] would tell Figueres and Cuduber that it is intended to also enroll Cubans in the school and that in the opinion of [redacted] they should be drawn from exile organizations known to be dedicated to democratic principles, such as Artime's MRR, Manolo Ray's JURE, the MRP and MDC. It is unlikely that Figueres and Cuduber would demur. In any case, their demurrals could be overruled. The prominent mention of the MRR as a cradle of democratic ideas and the actual inclusion of students selected by Artime would postulate acceptance of the MRR and of Artime as exponents of a political philosophy acceptable to the moderate left. Any excoriation of Artime for having allied himself with the Semozas would be blunted if the MRR forms a part of the student body (and conceivably the faculty) of the [redacted]

2. I intend to suggest to Artime that he pay his respects to Figueres in Cambridge, of course without alluding to the school project. The purpose of the call would, quite frankly, be to butter up Figueres.

All the information I have been able to gather suggests that the combination of Munos Martin/Figueroa, as far as Washington is concerned, is unbeatable and that Artime has little choice but to align himself with their way of looking at things--or at least to pay lip service to it.

3. Another angle I would like to explore is President Betancourt. The more I read of his accomplishments as president, the more impressed I am. What would you think of having Artime, armed with a letter of introduction from Figueres, pay Betancourt a call before he relinquishes the presidency. Artime's approach would not be that of a supplicant or solicitor of support, but that of a young man making a pilgrimage, sitting at the feet of a revolutionary who has been successful, absorbing knowledge of how it was done. He could ask Betancourt, after he is out from under the daily grind of government, to address himself to the problems of post-Castro Cuba. He could invite him to chair a seminar attended by the MRR leadership. The objective would, of course, be to involve Betancourt in the affairs of the MRR, without putting his name on the masthead and without asking him to contribute anything but reflections of his lustre as a Latin American leader who bequeathed his country a constitutional and democratic regime. Undoubtedly Artime will have to cast off ideological ballast in order to accommodate his reluctant sponsors (Figueres, Betancourt), but Havana "vaut bien une messe." As a minimum objective, Artime would in any case have to strive to neutralize the latent animosities of the moderate left, denying Amnoldo Ray an unchallenged ascendancy in monopolizing its support, which he can probably get for the asking.

4. A welcome by-product of the resuscitation of JMHART, is "Combate," an influential periodical with strong readership appeal in Latin America among elements of the moderate left, edited by Monje. A German national named Dr. Erich Herzog who is a member of the Social Democratic Party of Germany (SPD) has been lecturing in San Jose on an "Ideological Inquiry into Communism," his program, indirectly sponsored by the Federal Republic, will be absorbed by JMHART. He wields considerable influence in molding the thinking of Central America's left of center leadership. The First Secretary of the Israeli Embassy in Guatemala has also been mentioned as influential among the intellectual elite. A Puerto Rican named Santiago Pollante
