HARVEY testified that he worked with a man called JUSTIN O'DONNELL in Staff. He stated that O'DONNELL came to him and said that he had been approached by RICHARD BISSELL, who was then the Deputy Director of Plans (DD/P) to undertake an operation in the Congo, one of the objectives of which was the elimination of PATRICE LUMUMBA. HARVEY testified that O'DONNELL told him that he had declined to undertake this assignment.

Page 4
HARVEY testified that he subsequently had a conversation with BISSELL, in which BISSELL stated that he had requested O'DONNELL to undertake such an operation. (9-10)

HARVEY testified that he did not know about any steps undertaken on behalf of the Agency in connection with any proposals to eliminate LUMUMBA. (10)

OCCURRENCE:

On May 21, 1975 in an affidavit to the Rockefeller Commission Mr. Douglas Dillon stated that in late July or early August of 1960 he attended a meeting in the Pentagon in which the overall Congo problem was discussed. He stated: "During the discussion, which covered a great variety of matters, my recollection is that a question regarding a possibility of an assassination attempt against Lumumba was briefly raised. The CIA representative indicated that the agency did not undertake this sort of operation. This ended consideration of this subject. With this one exception I never heard any discussion of assassination attempts against anyone."

BISSELL testified that no one authorized him to tell O'DONNELL to take steps toward assassinating LUMUMBA. (54) He did not inform the WHITE HOUSE and, to the best of his knowledge, no one informed the WHITE HOUSE that this assignment had been made. (54) BISSELL said that the initiative probably came from himself. (55) BISSELL emphasizes that he did not "seek to assassinate" (55) LUMUMBA, but rather "told a member of the Clandestine Service to make plans and develop the capability so to do if it were approved and ordered." (55) He recognized that it would have to "have approval at the highest level of government" (55).

BISSELL said that the philosophy described by the Chief of the CIA Africa Division, probably BRONSON TWEEDY, in a memorandum in late 1960, was probably applicable to matters within the scope of Project ZRRIFLE. The memorandum recommended the agent WIROGUE in these terms: "He is indeed aware of the precepts of right and wrong, but if he is given an assignment, which may be morally wrong in the eyes of the world, but necessary because his case officer ordered him to carry it out, then it is right, and he will dutifully undertake appropriate action for its execution without pangs of conscience. In a word, he can rationalize all actions" (59).

PERSONS/ENTITIES: Bissell, Allen Dulles DATES: 1950-1951 CATEGORIES: General Themes

"The device or the doctrine of plausible deniability" (5) was explained by Bissell: for any covert operation that was likely to have a visible consequence one objective was to carry out such operations "in such a way that they could be plausibly disclaimed by the U.S. government." (5)

PRESIDENTIAL DENIABILITY: "To protect the President" (5) Allen Dulles would have attempted "to have indicated to the two successive presidents the general objective of the operation that was contemplated, to make that sufficiently clear so that the President--either President Eisenhower or President Kennedy could have ordered the termination of the operation, but to give the President just as little information about it as possible beyond an understanding of its general purpose. Such an approach to the President would have had as its purpose to leave him in the position to deny knowledge of the operation if it should surface." (5-6) Bissell believed, based on "my knowledge of command relationship, of Allen Dulles as an individual, and of his mode of operations--is that authorization was obtained by him in the manner that I have indicated" (6); i.e., "circumlocutions" (6)

Bissell uses this theory of plausible deniability as his explanation for the reason that neither he nor anyone else in the Agency would have discussed an assassination operation on their own initiative with members of the White House Staff. "The effort would have been to hold to the absolute minimum the number of people who knew that the President had been consulted, had been notified, and had given, perhaps only tacitly, his authorization." CATEGORIES:OCCURRENCE:

Bissell recalls that this is true (p. 49), but he cannot remember who in the White House made this request (p. 49). Bissell places this request in early 1961. (p. 50). Bissell remembers assigning William Harvey the task of developing the Executive Action program, but he does not remember the requests from the White House (p. 50). Bissell suggests that the requests might have come from Bundy (p. 49) or Walt Rostow (p. 51). Bissell does not deny the truth of the quote from Harvey that he, Bissell, stated that he received two requests from the White House to set up the ZRRIFLE assassination capability. But he does not remember specific conversations (p. 51).

BISSELL said that shortly after the advent of the KENNEDY ADMINISTRATION there were weekly luncheon meetings in the STATE DEPARTMENT with BUNDY and ROSTOW in attendance representing the WHITE HOUSE, BISSELL in attendance from the CIA, and one or two people from the Departments of STATE and DEFENSE, roughly at the Assistant Secretary level. No minutes were kept. They were occasions for discussing without agenda whatever topics were brought out. (p. 81-82).

BISSELL testified that the proposal for an Executive Action project at those luncheon meetings was "exactly the sort of thing that could have happened, and this is the kind of place where I think that it probably was proposed." (p. 82).

He said further that assuming there were two requests from the WHITE HOUSE, they could have come at successive meetings of this sort. (p. 82).

BISSELL indicated that he might have made reports on the developments in the Executive Action program at these luncheon meetings, but "as I normally operated I would replied more particularly to ROSTOW in this case." (p. 82). (Continued)

OCCURRENCE: Harvey testified that the following events led him to believe that the White House had approved, at least in principle, the operation to assassinate Castro. First, he had a conversation early in 1961 with Bissell, when Bissell told him that, on one or more occasions, he had been urged by the White House to see that the Agency developed an Executive Action capability. (80) Bissell referred to the White House only in general; and did not name specific individuals. (81)

Harvey testified that he believed that if the White House had given a "generalized approval, in principle," then the CIA would have been acting within its authority to mount a specific operation against Castro." (82) He further testified that he could conceive of situations, including assassinations, where "no one would want to charge the President, personally, with the complete dirty-handed details of it." When HARVEY was asked if the multipurpose use included assassination, he stated that if he had ever been directly ordered to perform an assassination, he would have considered the people spotted by Q.J.Win as possibilities. (50) He testified that before someone would have actually been approached to carry out that operation, there would have been a long period of assessment and cross checks. As far as he knew, the particular spotting mechanism never went that far. So far as HARVEY could recall K.J.Win was used only once in connection with an operation in the Congo, which was not an assassination operation. (51)

In response to the increasing requirements for the operational procurement of foreign code and cipher materials, division D in 1960 began spotting of agent assets as a developmental activity. During the same period requirements from NSA became more refined and in many respects more sentative because most agencies are not equipped to conduct this type of operation, and because of the desirability to completely centralize control over this entire effort, it was determined that division d which was the closest touch with NSA on procurement requirements, could best conduct the activity. The spotting activity has now advanced far enough to justify removing from the OOA category. (exhibit 1, page 1 - 2)

OCCURRENCE:

HARVEY summarized the thrust of BISSELL's conversation with him concerning setting up an EXECUTIVE ACTION CAPABILITY: "I have been charged by the WHITE HOUSE with the development of an EXECUTIVE ACTION CAPABILITY. Will you please survey it and see what you can do about it and tell me what you can do about it." (44)

To the best of his knowledge, HELMS knew nothing about the program. (44) As far as HARVEY could recall, HELMS did not know about the program until he briefed HELMS about the fact that he had been given the assignment by BISSELL. (44)

HARVEY testified that after he reported back to BISSELL, explaining his generally negative assessment of the EXECUTIVE ACTION CAPABILITY, that he was instructed to continue and at least make reasonable efforts to see what the CIA had in the way of assets without communicating his objectives outside of a limited circle within the intelligence agency. (45) Aside from determining if the CIA had an EXECUTIVE ACTION CAPABILITY, he was instructed to at least attempt to develop a capability for possible stand-by use. (45) (con't)

OCCURRENCE:

HARVEY testified that after his meeting with BISSELL concerning setting up an EXECUTIVE ACTION PROGRAM, that he discussed, in theoretical terms, with a few officers whom he trusted the whole subject of assassination, including whether assassination was a proper weapon of an American intelligence service, and whether it was in the CIA's capability to do it effectively and properly, securely and discreetly. (37-A - 38)

He concluded that assassinations could be used only rarely, and then under carefully controlled conditions, and, as a result of the greatest provocation. Secondly, there were several caveats about the technical effectiveness of the CIA in carrying out this type of operation. (38) His ultimate conclusion was that the CIA did not have the assets. There were no staff officers who were capable of this kind of direct action or to whom he would have been willing to delegate authority to carry out such action. (39)

HARVEY testified that he decided that assassinations were generally impracticable and reported his conclusions to both BISSELL and HELMS. (40)

(57) Harvey testified that he did not know whether the DCI was advised, that he had been asked to create a capability for Executive Action and had taken certain steps to have an assessment of assets in that connection. (57) Harvey clarified that the wording of the memo probably meant that consideration should be given to the question of how, whether and under what circumstances the DCI should be officially advised of his program, "I want to make it clear that this in no way means he should be advised. He should not be advised, he should never be advised, he should always be advised." (59). OCCURRENCE: Harvey recalled some details of his conversation with Syd Gottlieb on January 25, 1961. It was a general philosophic discussion of assassination and assassination and techniques. As Harvey recalled, there was simply a general discussion of assassination as an intelligence service technique and weapon. It was logical for Gottlieb to be present at this discussion, because he had taken over a new job as Chief of the Technical Services Division of the Clandestine Services. As such, the TSD would have been responsible for technical support for assassinations. (54) The notation in Harvey's notes from that meeting, stating, "last resort beyond last resort, a confession of weakness," was, Harvey recalled, "a sort of concept of operation philosophy which I expressed to Gottlieb." They were not being considered as specific targets, but they were three people that might come to mind in conjunction with such an operation (55).
