During the investigation of the criminal influence in the International Hod Carriers, Building and Common Laborers Union, Local #1, 3942 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill. (92-7325), a review of the Chicago PD files showed that Joseph Aiello and James Caporale attended the wake of Sam Giancana's wife in June, 1955. CG 6443-C, on 9/9/51, reported that Caporale was reportedly taking orders from Charles Nicolletti as well as from Giancana. (u)

It was noted that Nicolletti was one of Giancana's top ranking lieutenants in the Chicago criminal hierarchy, while Caporale and Aiello were Financial Secretary and Vice-President Business Agent respectively of the above local. (u)

CG 6564-PC (137-8306) furnished information regarding several top ranking boxers and criminal influence in the boxing game. CG 6564-PC stated that he was one of Sonny Liston's managers after Liston's release from prison in 1957 and in order to get aid in recovering loans made and his piece of Liston's contract, he appealed to Samuel Giancana. After he told his story to Giancana, he was promised help but the results of that contact was unproductive. (u)

"(3) It is indicated that Irwin Fruchtman advised Sternman on two different occasions that he had been "out west." Normally we would interpret this to mean a visit to the Western US, however we also understand that in the Chicago underworld, the expression "out west" means a visit to the home of Sam Giancana in the Chicago suburbs. It may well be wild speculation that Fruchtman would be visiting and receiving orders from Giancana, but we do know that Murray Humphries met Sternman et al in Montreal, and that Humphries is closely associated with Giancana.
