Jack Anderson JFK Death Halted Cuban Oil Raid

THE SUPPRESSED STORY can now be fold of how the Central Intelligence Agency organized a Cuban exile raid on Cuba's key oil refinery in 1963 but aborted it after the assassination of President Kennedy.

14-00000

Insiders say the corporate oil giants, hoping eventually to recover their property in Cuba, brought quiet pressure to quash any raids upon relineries. Lyndon Johnson, who canceled the raid after succeeding bir. Kennedy in the White House, was close to Texas oil interests.

We have learned the dramatic details from Bradley Avers, a 36-year-old former Army captain, who was sefected by the CIA to train Cuban exiles for infiltration and assault missions including the refinery raid in Matanzas province.

We have checked out Ayers' story with our own sources, who confirm he is correct about names, places and dates. From a group of pictures, Ayers also was able to pick out immediately a CiA undercover operative who we knew had been invoived in the CIA raids against Cuba.

The rugged Ayers, a former Army ranger instructor, trained the refittery raiders, The recruiting for the mission had already been completed before he was assigned to the project. CIA officials took him by motor faunch through swampy Everglades canals and across the open sea to secluded Florida Keys to meet the recruits.

Avers and the CIA men selected Palo Alto Key, Upper Key Largo and Card Sound on the edge of the Everglades as training sites, "Most of the Cubans," said Ayers, "were bank clerks, busboys, waiters, musicians, laborers, men who had fied to the United States. Many had never fired a weapon. They were disorganized and undisciplined. I got the job of reorganizing the training program." AYERS ran off simulated raids near Card Sound against a local Southern Bell microwave facility with a high security fence. Other nights, he shared black beans and rice, drank and smoked "pot" with his Cuban cadre.

The raciag recruits gradually became a fichting team. For firsthand experience, he secretly accompanied two infiltration groups on missions to Cuba.

"We went on a commercially rigged trawler, a 'cover' vessel," he said, "We ran blackout under a quarter moon, towing a V-20 faunch, a high-powered fiberglass boat.

"We exchanced light signals with the partisans ashore in Plaar del Rio and launched two rubber boats. The team made contact with the partisans, and we picked up a wounded man who'd been a prisoner of Castro. But the Caban partisans were carcless with the lights.

"After we got the wounded man into a rubber boat, we were discovered by a Soviettype patrol craft with spotlights. We covered our withdrawal with machinegans from the V-20 boat. Although we took casualties, we finally got back to the trawler. Our boats were pretty well shot up.

"On the way home, we saw a Cuban fishing craft flying a distress flag and found it had a load of refucees. We took them on board."

A second serie to cache supplies for agents already in Cuba was less eventful. Finally, in September, 1963, Avers was instructed by the CIA to make detailed training plans for the refinery raid.

He was given specific orders not to land on Cuba himself during the raid, But he was too emotionally involved with the Cubans' cause to stay out and wrotehimself into the plans. "We were all on a live-for-today, tomorrow-we-die philosophy," he explained. But on the day of the final rehearsal, President Kennedy was killed, and the CIA ordered Ayers to shut down the operation, "I was in a sort of trauma," said the swashbuekling instructor. "I made trips to Washington to plead the cause of the freedom fighters with the minor officials I knew. But I just got disappointed and angry."

disappointed and angry." Finally in October, 1964, Ayers resigned from active duty with a long statement of principle to his CLA and Army superiors. "As a soldier, I had been taucht I shouldn't question political or diplomatic action," he wrote, "But as a free-thinking American citizen, I couldat, gabordinate my duty, My country was no longer playing to win, and my faith in the goals to which I dedicated my life was shaken."
