

Party Leaders Back Ellington As Favorite Son

Two Shelby County Democratic leaders yesterday testified "a tremendous response" in the proposal that Gov. Billie Ellington go to the party's national convention in Tennessee's favorite son contest.

There is reason to believe that support for Governor Ellington will spread to night-long session, said John Porter Canale and James Irwin.

The governor meets April 11 of the executive committee with other Democratic governor and Mr. Irwin is former congressman in St. Louis to discuss the party's presidential campaign, and their efforts were seen as a way to bring the governor to the national convention in Nashville.

Both said as much. "At a time when peace overtures are being made, we do not feel that our party should centralize its support behind one man," said Mr. Irwin.

Mr. Canale mentioned the possibility of "a move south" to split the delegates in favor of candidates that favor the extreme right position in Vietnam.

In Nashville, a stop-Ellington movement has already begun among the newly organized Southern Democrats of Tennessee, an anti-Vietnam War group.

Tuesday night, Nashville members of the group met at Vanderbilt University and were held by State Chairman Roger Cowan of Greenville.

Both said as much. "At a time when peace overtures are being made, we do not feel that our party should centralize its support behind one man," said Mr. Irwin.
