SMITH, PETER P.

Mr. Smith an attorney, was a personal friend of Robert Kennedy and worked with him during 1964. He was in charge of the advance party of the Los Angeles office and responsible for the movements of Kennedy in the Los Angeles area during his campaign. On the nights of June 4 and 5, 1968, his specific job was to make arrangements to move the Senator in and out of the various rooms of the Ambassador Hotel. Jack Gallivan was in Los Angeles and assisted him. Bill Barry and Fred Dutton were acting as Kennedy's immediate bodyguards, and Rosy Grier and Rafer Johnson were assisting, but it was Dutton and Barry who actually set the routes for Kennedy to follow within the Ambassador Hotel. He was also assisted by Mr. Uno. the catering manager of the hotel.

He was in the Embassy Room with Kennedy and his numerous aides as the results of the election began to come in. The Senator came to him and invited him to be sure and come to The Factory, a nightclub in which he believed Pierre Salinger had some interest. As the victory became assured for the Senator, a small conference was held between Kennedy and his staff, and it was decided that the Senator would have to hold a press conference as soon as he had spoken to his supporters in the hotel ballroom. It was decided that the best place to have such a conference would be in the press room on the same floor as the Embassy Room. He understood that Fred Dutton and Bill Barry had reviewed the route to be taken but that Senator Kennedy was the one that made the final decision.

At the time the Senator began his victory statement, Smith left the podium to make his way downstairs to insure that the motorcade was in position. It was necessary to contact the Riggs Funeral Home to furnish escort service for the Kennedy Party. They did not have police escort and adequate police protection in Los Angeles; as everyone was led to believe, and for this reason they had engaged Riggs escort service. As soon as he checked to see that the motorcade was in position, he returned to the Embassy Room.

Upon returning, he could not enter so he made his way to the press room where he spoke with Richard Drayne. Drayne told them that the Senator would come into the press room and hold a press conference. The Senator would then go through the kitchen and out to the motorcade. There was a guard stationed at the entrance to the press room when he entered the door. After this brief discussion with Drayne, he walked to the press room door and opened it, and at that instant heard what sounded like several firecrackers going off in rapid succession. He saw nothing of the actual shooting but heard the shots and saw the mass of people. He looked at the area where the Senator had fallen and noticed that Uno and Jack Gallivan appeared to be in front of the Senator. He realized what had occurred and returned to the far entrance of the press room to get the guard to stop everyone and seal off the entrance. He saw several people run past him, and a couple of these people were women. However, none of these women wore a polka dot dress. He believes most of these people were reporters rushing to a telephone. When Sirhan was taken out of the kitchen area by the police, they passed him and he got a good look at Sirhan. He could not recall having observed Sirhan prior to this time.

He had given a sound man named Jerry Costigan a pass to get into the Embassy Room that evening. Costigan was on the platform in the vicinity of the lectern during the evening, and after Kennedy's death Costigan told him that he had moved Sirhan off of the platform during the evening of June 4, 1968.

While traveling back to New York, something struck him as being unusual at Good Samaritan Hospital. Smith stated, at the hospital a telephone call came in for Jerry Bruno and since he was not available Smith took the call. The caller was Gary Dedell, the same individual who was later picked up in New York City attempting to enter St. Patrick's Cathedral with an unloaded .38 caliber revolver on June 8, 1968. Dedell requested Smith to ask Bruno if he wanted him to bring Bruno's wife to Los Angeles. Smith described this caller to Bruno and Bruno commented, "He is a hanger-on from Syracuse, New York."

Smith added that contrary to what has been in the newspapers and what people have been given to believe, the Los Angeles Police Department refused to give the Senator and his party adequate police protection. When Senator Kennedy and his party came off the freeway into Los Angeles, they were met by the police and told that they could not run any lights. After they proceeded several blocks, the crowds began to gather each time the motorcade stopped for a light, and that finally the police returned and took them straight on through the traffic lights to their destination in Los Angeles. The police issued them citations for passing the traffic lights, and he considered their relations with the police as strained from the very beginning.

Sirhan also had many boxes of cheap ammunition, and a box of .22 caliber long rifle hollowpoints. The gun looked like a piece of "junk." Sirhan told him he had purchased the revolver for forty dollars and had been practicing with it for four months.
