Mr. Hulsman was an ambulance driver for the City of Los Angeles and was dispatched to the Ambassador Hotel on June 5, 1968, at 12:17 a.m., accompanied by attendant, Max Behrman. Upon arrival at the hotel he drove to the main entrance and was met by several campaign members who directed him to the scene of the shooting. Upon reaching the kitchen area he recognized Senator Kennedy lying on the floor in front of the elevator. Next to the Senator was Paul Schrade who was lying on his back in a pool of blood. He went directly to the Senator and saw Mrs. Kennedy applying an ice pack to his head. Hulsman spoke to him and told him everything would be all right and that they were taking him to the hospital. The Senator was placed on the stretcher and the Senator commented "Don't, please don't move me." During this time Mrs. Kennedy attempted to prevent him from moving the Senator. Once, in the elevator, Kennedy moved his legs and Hulsman was watching him closely so that he would not roll off the stretcher. Mrs. Kennedy placed her arm around the Senator's neck and tried to stop Hulsman from pushing the stretcher. He took her arm away and stated "Come on. We're going to the hospital."

Upon reaching the ambulance he placed the Senator inside and everyone tried to get into the ambulance. However, only Mrs. Kennedy, Max Behrman, and one unidentified white male were allowed in the ambulance. Someone opened the rear doors and Hulsman returned to make sure they were securely locked. In the cab of the ambulance was Bill Barry and two unknown white males. As they left the hotel a patrol car escorted them back to the Central Receiving Hospital. Enroute he heard Mrs. Kennedy arguing with Behrman. As they proceeded, Bill Barry attempted to crawl into the ambulance portion of the vehicle and it was necessary for Hulsman to restrain him. Barry then said "Don't let the son of a bitch touch him.", referring to Behrman's efforts to aid Kennedy. Upon arrival they were met by the hospital staff and removed Kennedy from the ambulance to the treatment room. As the stretcher was being wheeled into the hospital a unknown photographer reached out and grasped the stretcher with one hand and held a camera with the other. Mrs. Kennedy screamed to the man to leave the stretcher alone and Bill Barry reached across and struck the man with sufficient force to make him release the stretcher. After unloading the Senator he and Behrman were ordered to return to the Ambassador Hotel where they picked up Paul Schrade. Schrade was accompanied by Doctor McBroom.
