Problem 3 developed the concept of a land/structure interface involving some sort of electromagnetic radiation. A strong AI of queasy stomach asserted itself. Later the site presented the impression of a large, unusual circular, supported structure of metal and lots of angles, located on high, rocky, sparsely vegetated terrain. Weather was cool, grey, dismal; few people were present. Structure had an "official" purpose, perhaps monitoring or relay, had equipment, was isolated, and the location had a Mediterranean feel (AOL of Greek island), though the structure seemed U.S.-related. Some unsuspecting threat existed, of which the few people present were unaware, but would not have surprised them had they known. They were doing some routine job. They were "not fully prepared," and relatively "undefended." A sense of observing was present. Location seemed to be "austerely scenic."
