Summary of Information

The target has to do with boats and/or is associated with shipping. Specifically, there is a movement or transport of material. There is another motion/movement which is associated with water. This is reminiscent of water cascading over a wall or smooth surface. There are hard structures and those consisting of manipulated wood i.e. wooden beams/planks.

It is dark and cold in portions of the site. Objects present here are "saturated" with a liquid. This saturation tends to be encompassing. The liquid is mineral and nutrient rich, is life supporting/sustaining and is recycled. There is a soft, natural feature which is conceptually associated with "organic fluff".

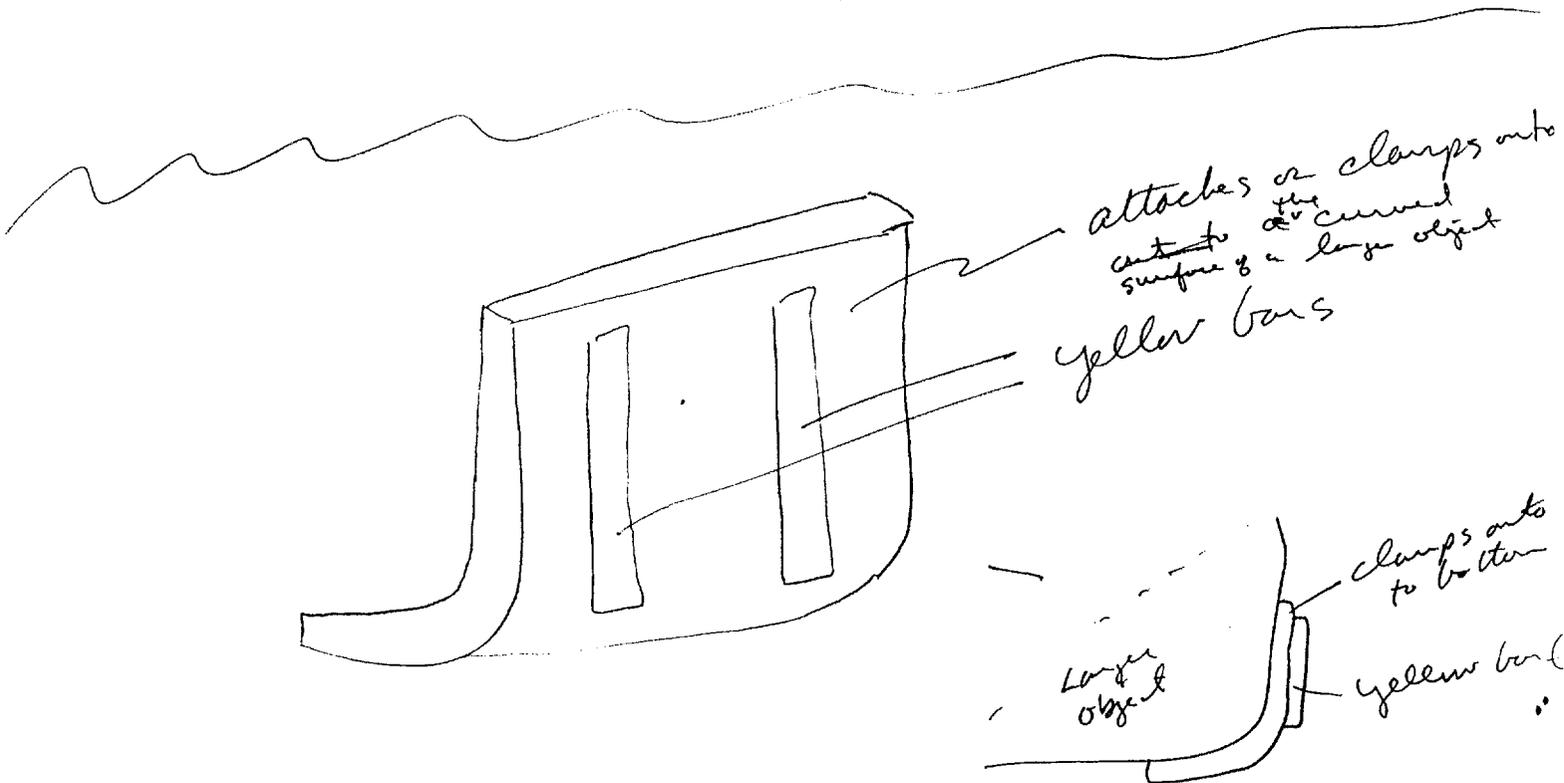

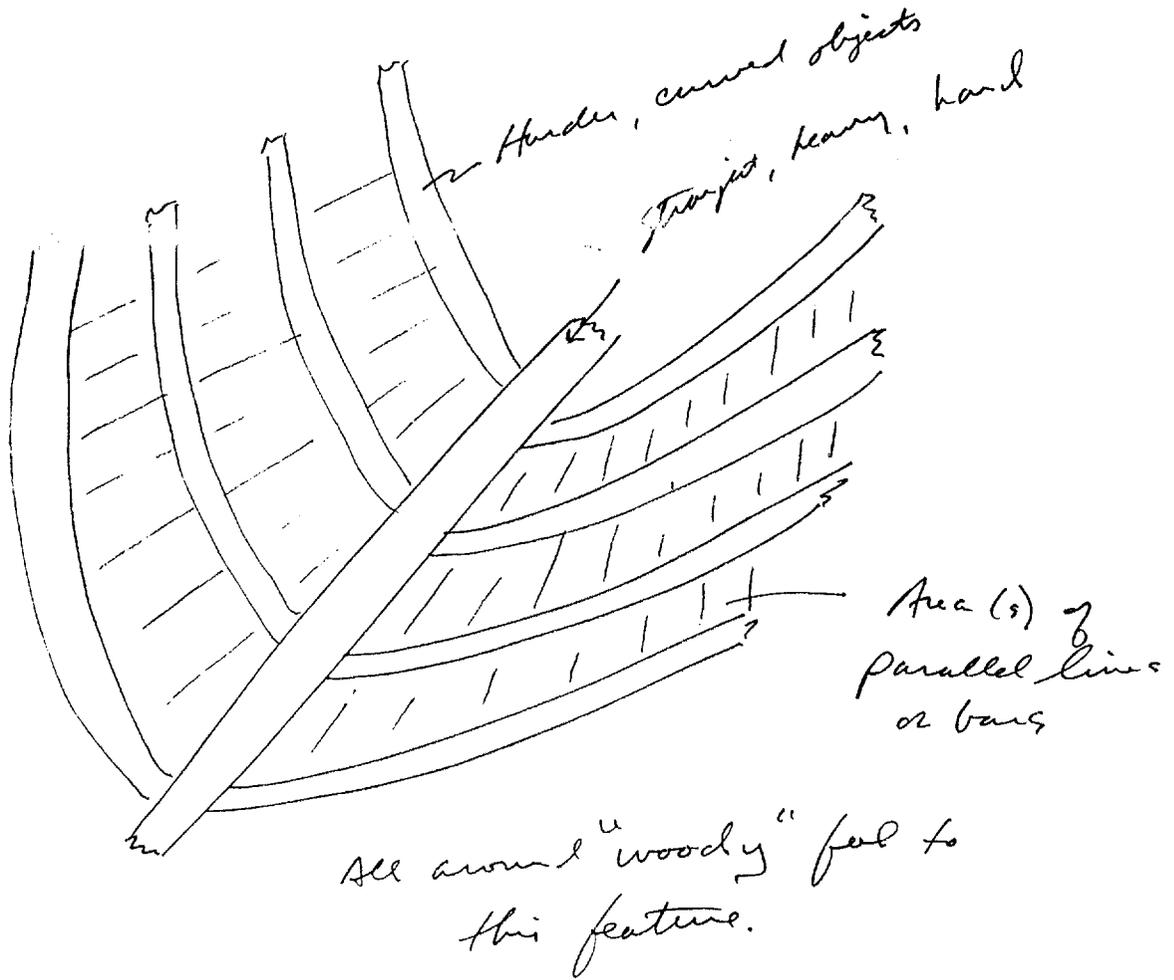

There is floating or suspended material and a sandy feeling. Some features within the target area are crumbling and decomposing. There is a burning/stinging sensation, like sea water, in the nose. Bright flashes and glimmers sporadically occur. There are portions of the site which have an overall soothing feeling.

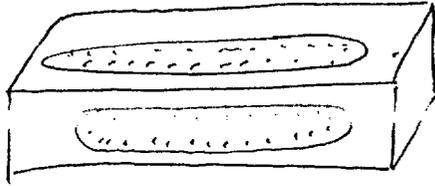

There are parallel lines or bars which cover large portions within the target area. Loose material is either swept into, or sucked into, the rectangularly shaped opening of a moving object. The area around this object is also dark and black.

There is a strangely angled corner between a wall and floor; i.e. not perpendicular. There is an object whose surface is irregular and peeling away. This is reminiscent of rusting metal.

There are stacks of soft/hard squares. These do not feel completely solid nor do they look like boxes. There is an object or layer of hard material with a fluid feeling on either side of it; in other words, "fluid/object/fluid".

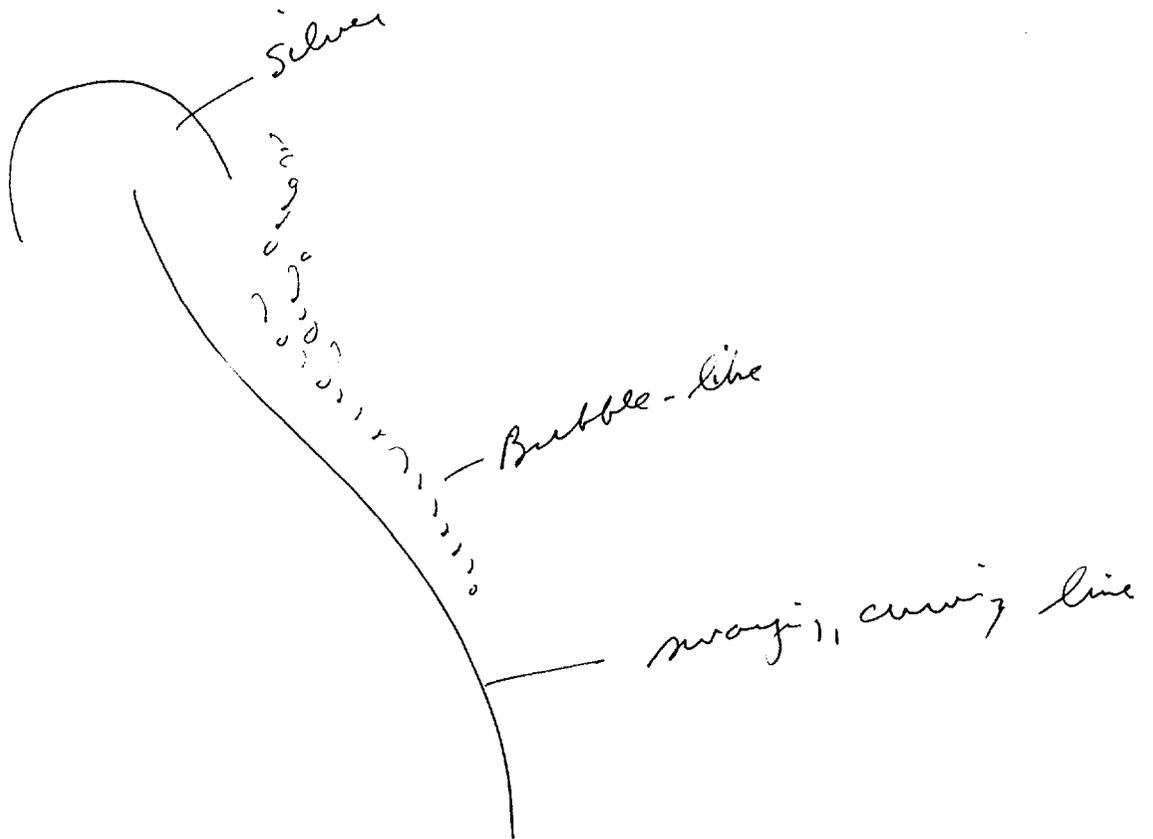

There is an object, or a composition of objects, which have the concept of being the "backbone" to something. Sections of this object are reminiscent of vertebrae.
