Summary of Information

The target is in an area of rolling green hills. There is a gigantic natural (rock) or manmade (concrete) monolith which is circular in shape. The concept of "containment" is associated with the site and the monolith. There is an up and down or plunging movement reminiscent of a weight on an elastic cord. There is also a circular or swirling motion indicative of turbulence produced by a vortex. There is a contradiction of the presence of "energies", as in man-produced energies, and that of "natural power".

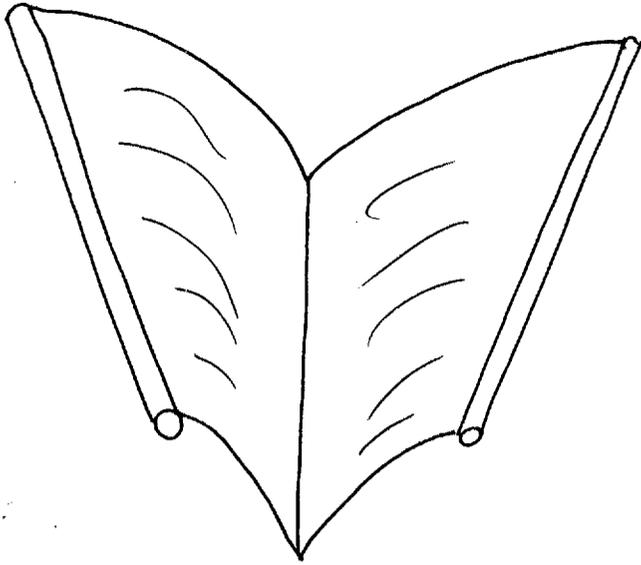

There is the concept of a "corner stone". Numerous parallel lines or bars occur which are reminiscent of wooden planks. There is a "soft" aspect to the target; soft in the sense of water. Other attributes of the target include: gray, "tube-like", stone, rough, manipulated, "poured", concrete, construction and black rubber gloves. An object is being kicked repeatedly by an individual.

A small group of individuals are mistrustful of their immediate superior. The latter has misused authority and betrayed the trust of the former.

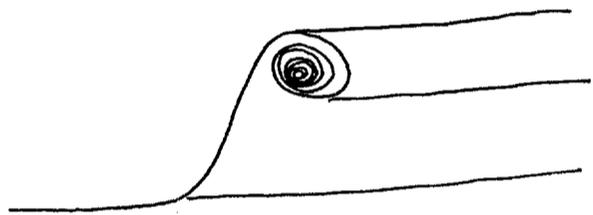

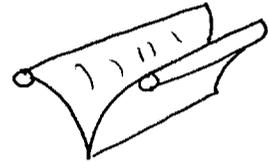

A secondary target was perceived. This was a scene of a Paleolithic rock shelter ca. 50,000 B.P. with associated fire pits, totems, occupation/living loci, hides, etc. Attributes included deer fetish, bison, otter, rawhide pouches, tobacco, "scents", "medicines", wooden bowl and "burl". There was also the overwhelming smell of rotting bones.

There is a circular object or structure that is associated with lots of feathers (see page ii).
