Summary of Information

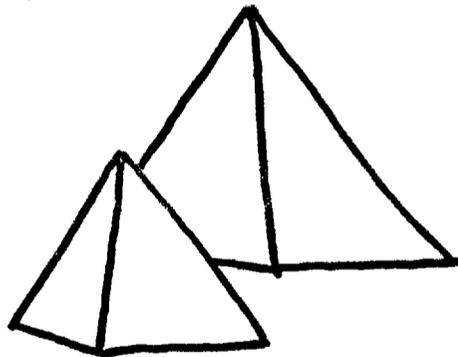

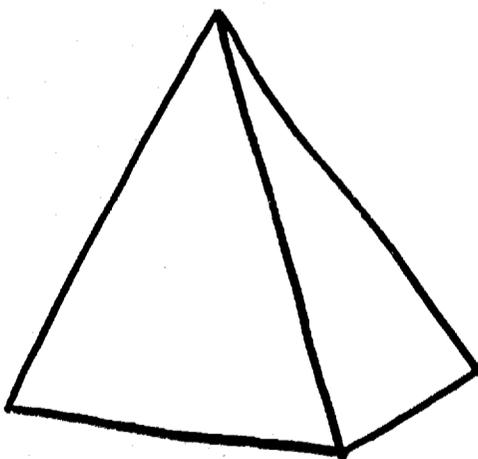

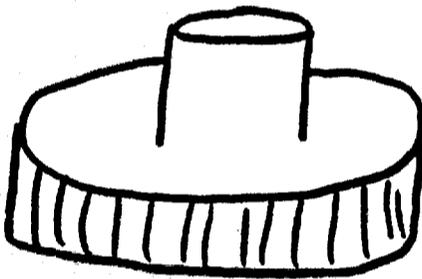

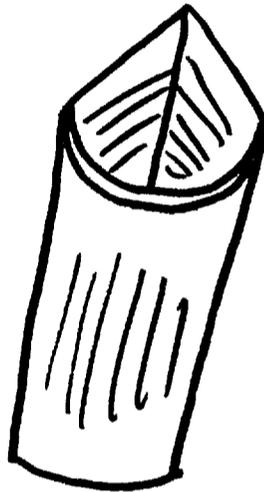

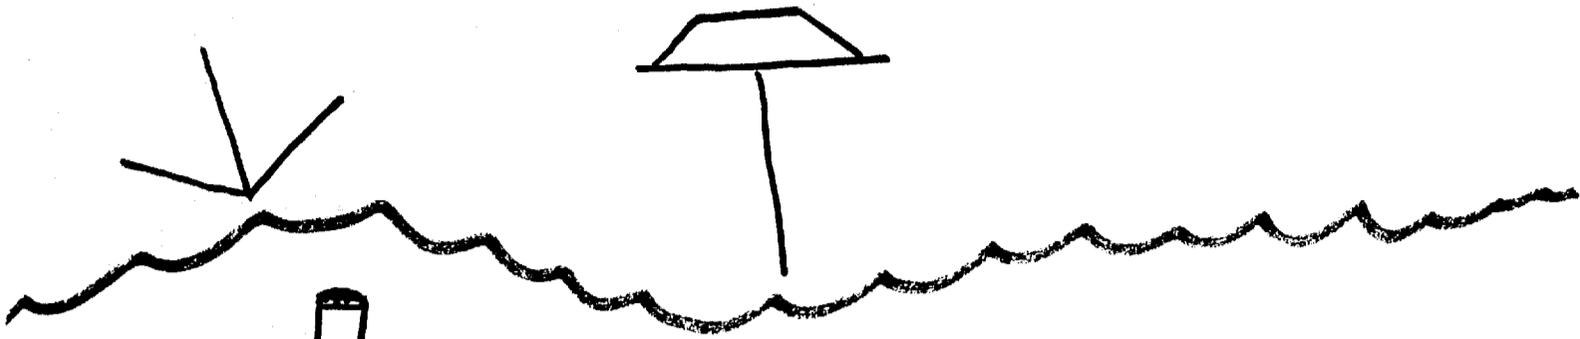

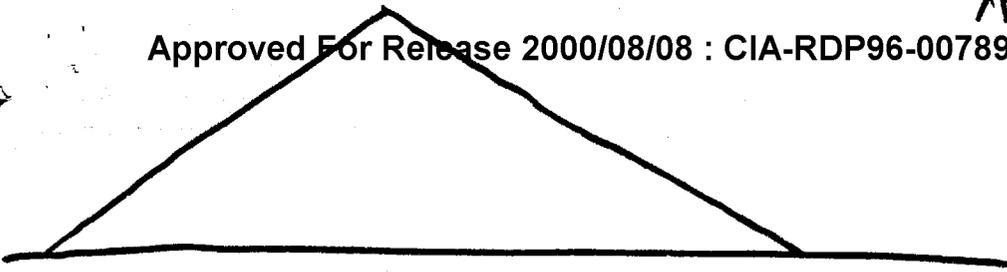

The target contains three features which are of similar shape and appear superimposed on one another. (One is prominent while the others occur in the background). They have a triangular shape and are extremely massive. There is a sense of great height and isolation. There is exposed layers of geological strata which are visible. There is also an area that is softer than the surrounding features and gives the appearance of moving or movement. There are large expanses of uninhabited land and the "view" is to the south.

The target feels both manmade and natural. Natural stone has been manipulated into large squares or blocks. The objects also appear brown-gray and have smooth-rough surfaces. There is a sense of interlocking or fitting together. There is a feeling of the presence of a hollowed-out area within one of these objects. The concept "Something is still in there!" is associated with this particular object.

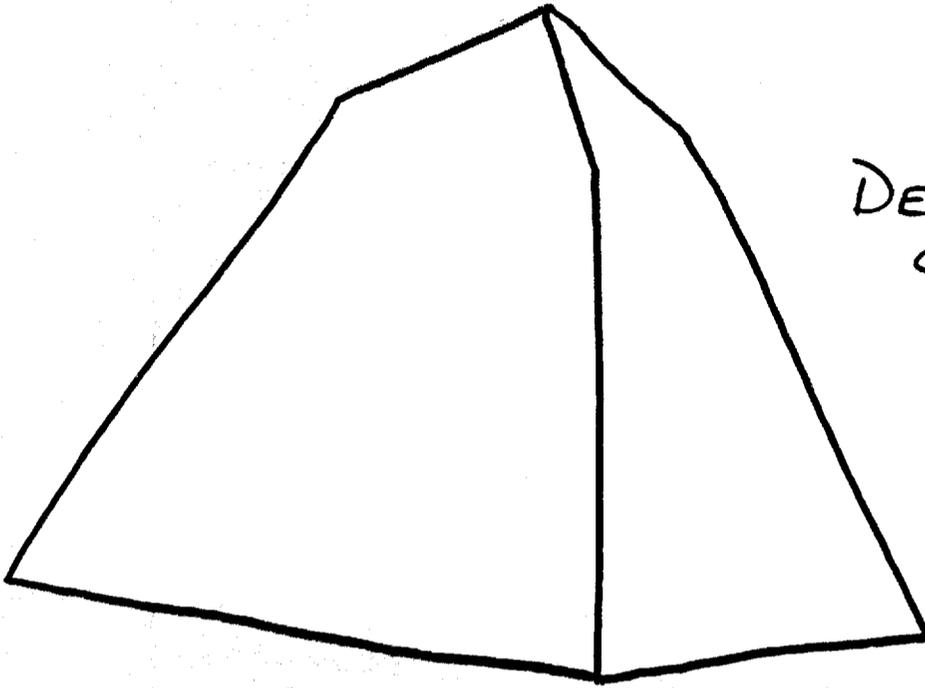

Some portions and/or features of the target are partially obscured from view by material which has been windblown. There is a sense of continuing decay or decomposition and wearing down associated with the target.

There is a yellowish glow or shaded area and large, flat surfaces. There is a sense of decay and crumbling associated with at least one of the objects.

There are rounded circle shapes and a rapid movement of individuals. This movement is reminiscent of dancing.
