Enduring Echoes of Peru's Past

DOFFING HIS MASK, a member of Los Panchitos dance troupe takes a breather from vigorous street dancing during a mid-year festival in Monsefú, a town on the northern coast of Peru. With its origins deep in the past, the dance pokes fun at figures of the present.

Coursing through the streets, the dancers enact a sort of morality play in which the wry dramas of everyday life are played out to the amusement of spectators. The finger of ridicule points to a landowner who abuses peasant workers, a judge who decides cases in favor of the rich, a priest who asks for money—indeed, some priest masks have horns.
