SUMMARY OF INFORMATION

President Bush will announce on the evening of 14 January 1991 that there will not be a war with Iraq. The reason being that Huessin will verbally agree to some type of negotiation or settlement. Although Huessin will continue to keep his troops in Kuwait and peace will not be immediately at hand, there will be more positive moves to end this tense situation.

Huessin will eventually remove his troops from Kuwait within the next two months. He will not remove them all at once but will do so in a rotational manner. One of the stipulations in the negotiations agreements is that the old regime of Kuwait will not return to power. This will be carried out.

Although there will not be a all-out war, there may be a small skirmish on water. This will occur on southern waters.

The Middle East situation will continue to be intense and the Yemans may be a source of trouble for United States interests in the very near future.

There will not be any terrorist attacks in the United States due to this situation.
