Summary:

The target person is a military officer who had been or is now on station in the area described in session #1. He is in his 50's, has a large nose, thick hands, is big-boned, stocky, not tall, strong (almost brutish), psychologically tough, has streaked (black-grey), combed back hair, furrowed brow, does not like to wear a hat, wears a tan uniform (like khakis); he appears to be a Soviet general officer. The next up in this man's chain of command seem to be civilians, but this arrangement may be only temporary for purposes of accomplishing some specific or general mission. Impression of a "foreign" but politically-controlled environment. The man is an exceptionally professional military leader--but more comfortable in the tactical vs strategic arena. He is not a political animal, does not like to be near the "head shed". He is a loner, he has no soft spots; military business is his only business--it is his milieu, he does not engage in small talk. He is beyond the concept of self-confidence, but not careless--only concerned that the job gets done right. He is an imposing figure (not so much physically), but his lieutenants trust his experience and savvy. He spends most of his time in the field but his presence is accepted by lower echelons (peers do not seem to be present); however, he does not participate in engagements, but is kept constantly apprised of dispositions, etc. This man's focus is upon the hilly/mountainous area directly to the west, where an operation is either ongoing or imminent. At least once in the past, he has flown over the eastern part of the area on what seems to have been a reconnaissance. There is a problem associated with this area akin to a "thorn in one's side" (AOL-rebels). The problem requires analysis/planning and action.

AI: Although this man would be a demanding superior, and probably not pleasant to be around, I would volunteer to serve with him without hesitation--he is my type of leader.
