1. (S/NF/SK) MISSION: Advanced training. The purpose of this session was to allow the viewer to experience a novel AI (that associated with the death and mutilation of animals), and to understand how such AI's impact upon (and possibly limit) the degree of conscious site/event awareness.
2. (S/NF/SK) VIEWER TASKING: 095 was provided with only the target coordinates, initially. After the expected AI, the viewer was instructed (in Stage 4) to "try and get behind the AI to see what is causing it".
3. (S/NF/SK) COMMENTS: 095 is currently undergoing ERV training. It has been approximatedly 3 weeks since the last CRV session and 095 (still an inexperienced CRV source) is a little out of practice; per 095, "I feel a little rusty".
4. (S/NF/SK) EVALUATION: ~~SG1~~ <sup>A</sup> (095 acquired the site/event and became acutely aware of the AI's negative influence upon perception-objectification of data).

... bizarre mutilations of cattle have occurred in a number of US states for nearly two decades. Despite reports and investigations into this continuing horror story — with its weird catalogue of organ removals, bloodless corpses and precise surgery — we are not nearer learning the identity of the mystery mutilators. The saga is an unresolved morass of baffling data, grim evidence, and complex as well as conflicting theories involving rumours of UFOs, pagan or military cults, scientific or governmental conspiracies, secret experiments, and so on. In a bold effort to 'see' beyond this impasse, New Jersey researcher Peter A. Jordan conducted an experiment: asking psychics to study photos of a case he investigated himself and to give a psychometric reading. These impressions, whose relevance you will have to decide for yourselves, is here published for the first time. Peter Jordan is a free-lance writer and lecturer on ufology and psychic research, and founder/director of the Association for the Study of Unexplained Phenomena (ASUP), Flushing, NY.

PREFACE

Five years of research into the unexplained has taught me several valuable lessons. Above all else, however, I have learned that the most spontaneous and instinctual methods of research often lead to the brightest discoveries. Whether investigating a putative haunting, or analyzing the spectacular claims of a UFO contactee, I could not escape the conviction that an investigation guided purely by intellect was empty. I quickly learned to appreciate moments of intuition which came across my path, and to grab hold of them as vigorously as I did the familiar logic of the philosopher's trade. With each new case I explored, the less I discarded as meaningless and irrelevant, and the more I came to view as symbolic and vital. In a sense, I was reborn. As was the case with the venerable Sufis, I yearned for greater progress in the co-evolution of Science and Spirit, and searched for signs of an impending "paradigm shift." I had been disappointed before. There would be no such drama. Only more struggle. On account of this struggle, I have developed new eyes. For that, I am grateful. It is with these new eyes that I am able to dream.

INTRODUCTION

In June of 1979, I became actively involved in the investigation of unexplained cattle mutilations. My primary source of information at that time was New Mexico State Police Officer Gabe Valdez, who kindly furnished me with a set of photographs taken on the ranch of Manuel Gomez, a rancher living in the northwest town of Dulce. Gomez, according to Valdez, had been the hardest hit in New Mexico by the mutilators, having lost 6 of his cows since 1976. The photographs I received from Valdez, in addition to depicting the alleged "surgical incisions" of the classic mutilation, also showed a series of odd, circular tracks discovered in the vicinity of the carcasses. Firmly etched into the hard dirt road, the imprints, which measured four inches in diameter, were shaped like "suction cups" and had been found arranged in

After extensive investigation, Valdez said that the origin of the strange prints "could not be determined."

Like many other ranchers affected by the mutilation phenomenon, Gomez was hopeful that a good, "logical" explanation would be found for the anomalous events in Dulce. Unfortunately, the mystery stubbornly refused to respond to reason, thus prompting a wave of vast speculation. Gomez was told by some that his cows had succumbed to "natural predation," and that the so-called "surgical incisions" were, in fact, produced by the sharp teeth of either foxes, badgers, coyotes, or magpies. Others pointed their fingers at local "cultists," linking the mutilations to "clandestine, pagan rituals," a claim widely made in other mutilation areas throughout the United States. Still others argued that the government was conducting secret tests on our livestock, using the reproductive organs as "bio-indicators" for monitoring the effects of fallout and other possible environmental hazards. Predictably, a small percentage conveniently used the bioindicator theory to nourish their own extraterrestrial hypothesis, simply replacing the word "government" with the words "alien superpower." UFO enthusiasts found this particular theory appealing, since, they reasoned, it helped to explain the absence of any leaks in the curtain of secrecy surrounding the mutilation phenomenon.

Gomez was not impressed, however, with much of this speculation. He denounced the predator theory as "nonsense," claiming that predators are physically "incapable" of performing incisions as precisely as in the mutilations, and also thought it "unlikely" that any government agency would go through such "expense and trouble" to conduct research that could more easily be accomplished by purchasing the cattle directly from him. At this juncture, Gomez is willing to give a small measure of credence to the popular cult and alien theories, though, he admits, "the motive, in either case, is still very unclear." "No matter how you look at it," says Gomez, "I can't find a Site was a flat, low, open, dry, warm, rocky, bleak area (AOL like Nevada) at night. The site consisted of a circular, marked area. Associated with the site was the feeling of bad air, contamination, energetics and radiation. AOL circle of death. Loud machine noises were present as were a group of men who were waiting to do something orchestrated or planned. They started closing in on something and each man was doing something—lots of excited motion. They were scurrying, preparing, measuring. What they were doing caused strong AIs of queasiness, and the feeling that what was going on was very bad. What was induced in the circular/ marked area is what caused the death. Associated with the word "death" were the concepts of the marked area, accidental this time, induced, scientific and unnatural. (AOL: chemical weapon/ military). The men were not from the immediate area, they were from at least 50-100 miles away. The men came from low, rectangular, fenced buildings near hills. The buildings had more floors than visible with the eye (underground floors). Associated with the building was a strong sense of security, secrecy, hiding and illegal activities. AOLs generated by the building were chem/bio warfare, helicopter, military base, scientists and the nuclear radiation symbol.
